

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

An Illustrated Weekly Magazine
Founded A. D. 1728 by Benj. Franklin

MARCH 12, 1904

FIVE CENTS THE COPY

DRAWN BY J. J. GOULD

McKINLEY AND HANNA—By William Allen White
AN AMERICAN IN NEW YORK—By Opie Read

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY, PHILADELPHIA

We are looking for YOU

We want every energetic, ambitious boy in America to write to us, and get information about our plan of earning money in spare time on Friday afternoons and Saturdays, selling

The Saturday Evening Post

We start boys in business without a cent of expense. If you want to begin earning money at once ask us to send you 10 copies of next week's issue of the magazine. They will be sent without any expense to you. These you can sell at 5c each, and thus provide the money for next week's supply at the wholesale price. Some boys are making $10 to $15 a week. You can do the same if you are willing to hustle.

Full information will go with the magazines, including a Booklet, "Boys Who Make Money," telling of the clever plans of some successful boys. Write to-day.

$250 IN CASH and a Trip to the St. Louis Fair as extra prizes for those who do good work next month, as well as other prizes, such as Baseball Outfits, Football Suits, etc.

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY
1225 Arch Street, Philadelphia

POPE MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

The renaissance of bicycling brings wit it one of the finest mechanical devices invented since the beginning of this industry. The

Two-Speed Gear CHAINLESS BICYCLE

Enables the rider, by a slight pressure of foot on pedal, to change from high to low gear for hill climbing and difficult roads.

Eastern Department, Hartford, Conn. Columbia Crawford Cleveland Tribune Western Department, Chicago, Ill. Crescent Imperial Rambler Monarch

Catalogues free at our 10,000 dealers' stores, or any one Catalogue mailed on receipt of a two-cent stamp.

STALL'S BOOKS

SELF AND SEX SERIES

Subjects that should be understood by every person and information properly given which should not be hidden by false or foolish modesty. Commended by highest medical authorities.

4 BOOKS TO MEN.
By Sylvanus Stall, D.D.
What a Young Boy Ought to Know.
What a Young Man Ought to Know.
What a Young Husband Ought to Know.
What a Man of 45 Ought to Know.
4 BOOKS TO WOMEN.
By Mrs. Mary Wood Allen, M.D., and Mrs. Emma F. A. Drake, M.D.
What a Young Girl Ought to Know.
What a Young Woman Ought to Know.
What a Young Wife Ought to Know.
What a Woman of 45 Ought to Know.

$1 per copy, post free. Table of contents free. 3 NEW BOOKS. "Manhood's Morning" (Conwell). A book of high ideas for young men. A golden gift book, $1, net. "Faces Towards the Light," devotional (Stall). A splendid book for spiritual quickening, $1, net. "Maternity" (Drake), 50c, net.

Vir Publishing Co., 2244 Land Title Bldg., Philadelphia, Pa.

"To Err is Human"— Not to Err—Elgin

The man who is always right on time is the man who carries the

ELGIN WATCH

Every Elgin Watch is fully guaranteed. All jewelers have Elgin Watches. "Timekeepers and Timekeepers," an illustrated history of the watch, sent free upon request to ELGIN NATIONAL WATCH CO., ELGIN, ILL.

A Bowling Alley in Your Home ONE-THIRD THE USUAL COST

The American Box Ball Alley will make your home bright and attractive; will keep the boys away from places where liquor is sold and where bad associations are formed. For Homes, Y. M. C. A.'s, Hotels, Schools, Academies—everywhere. The most wholesome and delightful means of entertainment ever invented. Beautifully built of hardwood throughout; handsomely finished; an ornament in any room.

WRITE FOR BOOKLET AND TESTIMONIALS

AMERICAN BOX BALL COMPANY, DEPT. 12, INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

PATENTS No attorney's fee until patent is allowed. Write for Inventor's Guide. FRANKLIN H. HOUGH, Washington, D. C.

REDUCED RATES on household goods to and from Colorado, California, Washington and Oregon. Write BEKINS HOUSEHOLD SHIPPING CO. 95-1, Washington St., Chicago.

"In One Ear and Out the Other"

A Good Memory Saves Time and Money. Pelman's System of Memory Training

converts a treacherous memory into a reliable one. Gives mind control and mental poise. An easy, simple and scientific method of training. Original and of absorbing interest. Requires but a few minutes each day, and richly repays the time invested. No matter what your life work, the Pelman System will make you more successful. Mr. Pelman's pupils range in age from 18 to 85 years. Taught in six languages. FREE—Mr. Pelman's book entitled—"Memory Training" (Its Laws and Their Application to "Practical Life"). This book is sent absolutely free, postpaid, upon request. Write at once.

THE PELMAN SCHOOL OF MEMORY TRAINING, 1641 Masonic Temple, Chicago. LONDON, 4, Bloomsbury Street, W. C. 1. PARIS, Avenue de Neuilly 109. MUNICH, Mozartstr. 9. MELBOURNE, G. P. O. Box 402. DURBAN, Natal, Lynn Building.

WELCH'S GRAPE JUICE

Drink Welch's Grape Juice for its delicious health-giving qualities. It tastes just like fresh Concord Grapes and this fruit nutrition in fluid form puts May warmth into December veins. You know just what you are drinking, for Welch's is pure and unfermented. Use it on the table.

Sold by druggists and grocers. Booklet free. 3-oz. bottle by mail, 10c. Welch Grape Juice Co., Westfield, N. Y.

FREE

This booklet tells how to make money on the farm, and outlines our course of home study in

Modern Agriculture

Under PROF. WM. F. BROOKS, Ph. D., of the Mass. Agricultural College. Treats of soils, tillage, drainage, fertilizers, crop rotation, stock feeding, poultry raising, dairying, etc. Also HORTICULTURE under PROF. BAILEY, of Cornell University, and AGRICULTURAL BACTERIOLOGY under PROF. CONN, of Wesleyan. Full COMMERCIAL, NORMAL AND ACADEMIC DEPARTMENTS. Tuition nominal. Textbooks FREE to our students. Catalogue and particulars free. Write today.

THE HOME CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL, Dept. 17, Springfield, Mass.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

Copyright, 1904, by THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY, in the United States and Great Britain

Founded A.D. 1728 by Benj. Franklin

Entered at the Philadelphia Post-Office as Second-Class Matter.

Published Weekly at 425 Arch Street by THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY

London: Hastings House, 10, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C.

Volume 170

PHILADELPHIA, MARCH 12, 1904

Number 37

McKINLEY AND HANNA

A Study of Hanna the Man, and the Ruling Passion of His Life

BY WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE

UNITED STATES

Senator Marcus A. Hanna, who has just died, may not leave a great name in American history. Yet he was a strong, simple soul, who under some circumstances and in an emergency might have risen to a prominence rarely equaled by American statesmen. The opportunity did not come, and Hanna has gone, leaving as the sum of his influence in the world the mark of a frank, virile character upon the limited number of human beings whom it is possible for one man to meet and know in the course of a brief and busy life. No important law and no important tendency of legislation may be put to Hanna's credit on the books of his country. And though he deserves much praise for his generalship of the fight for sound money in 1896, it must be remembered that he had by far the larger number of soldiers and the stronger sinews of war, and that, anyway, it was a captain's fight. If Hanna had not been the leader some one else would have led; and if not so successfully, at least he would have won. And although Hanna won brilliantly, and followed the success of '96 with a still greater political victory four years later, with the odds still more in his favor, political generals are not of the stuff that American heroes are made of, and Hanna in a generation from now will be almost as unknown for his political manipulations as are the party leaders of the last generation.

The only claim Mark Hanna will have on fame will be his claim as a most interesting human being. Hanna was a storage battery of those peculiar traits and hereditaments of the old Adam that we call humanity. We call them peculiar because, though we all have them in a more or less degree, society and the conventions of organized life have made most of us ashamed to show them, and when a man does show his red blood and does put his heart visibly into life we call him peculiar. What a world of masks we are! There are, of course, hundreds of men in America as strong as Hanna was, and as frank and direct in their attack on life. Humanity does not make men famous, but when a man makes the passion of his life a manly love for another man, and when that other happens to be a President of the United States, the party of the first part has a possible chance to slip into the temple of fame on his friend's ticket. Acheson got in thus with Æneas, Mæcenas was admitted with Horace, Boswell earned his ticket and put it in Johnson's name, and there is no reason why Mark Hanna and William McKinley shall be separated in death who were so closely united in life—for in this life neither would have been the man he was but for the other. Not that Hanna "made" McKinley, nor that McKinley "made" Hanna; but it required each to fill out what the other lacked, and the composite flattered them both, as we say of a photograph.

Hanna and McKinley met thirty years ago in a lawsuit. Hanna, an employer of labor, was trying to get some rioting strikers punished for destroying property. McKinley was the attorney for the strikers. During the trial of the suit the two young men became friends. They met upon the terms that they maintained till the end—public man and man of business. Although he went through to the thirty-third degree Hanna was never a politician and little of a public man—he was always the business man in politics, and McKinley for thirty years was the public man, the politician, and at last the statesman. Hanna had relations with men as individuals—thousands of men; McKinley had relations with the people. Thus they dovetailed their lives. McKinley admired young Hanna's strength and vigor of mind, his frankness, his raw honesty, his ability to handle men in the concrete—the individual man. Hanna took McKinley to his bosom for his gentleness, his infinite kindness and patience with things and people and issues that Hanna must have thought stupid and unimportant. Hanna was blunt and brusque and humorous; McKinley was cautious, reserved and most extraordinarily serious—so serious that at times he was almost ponderous. Hanna, who was coaxed into politics to lend the strength of a business man's presence to various State and Congressional delegations that Garfield and his friends were forming in Ohio, stayed in politics after Garfield's death, partly because it was fun and he liked the excitement of it, and partly because he found it paid him for his time; and thus Hanna and McKinley were thrown together more and more. Hanna was interested in the tariff; his business made him a Protectionist. Environment made it necessary for McKinley to be a Protectionist. Hanna's business gave him a conviction that Protection was right which amounted to a deep moral belief; McKinley's relations with his people made it necessary for him to study the Protection side of the tariff question as a lawyer looks up his case, and McKinley became the tariff champion of Ohio. If he had been running for Congress three hundred miles south of Ohio it is fair to assume that McKinley would have been on the other side of the lawsuit. Until he came to the White House McKinley had never been distinguished as a man who championed what the people should have, but rather he was known as one who knew what the people desired. As a Congressman he studied their wishes rather than their needs; and Hanna was Protection incarnate. So McKinley bestowed on Hanna admiration as sincere and respect as ardent as a repressed soul can give to its fellows. Hanna was more than the young politician's client; Hanna was the human representative of McKinley's political creed. But Hanna gave McKinley his heart.

In Congress McKinley's achievements were Hanna's personal pride, and the Congressman became the business man's hero. McKinley got knowledge of the country from Hanna taken from any book study, and McKinley Hanna's knowledge, deep in his heart that cussing the business the tariff and the questions—had a bench and to round judge in one of the Men who know hearings before the Committee of Commerce McKinley tariff bill taking form, that most uncertain them all about were just, and a closer and better business needs of the than he could have or from any course of grew wise with McKinley, who knew he was unsafe dis- problems of state— currency and like ambition to go on the out his career as a higher courts.

have said that at the Ways and Means gress, when the was growing and McKinley was the member of what rates that he was liable to change his mind twice or three times on any item. He studied hard and worked with his problem. He was on the Ways and Means Committee as his second choice. Reed's election as Speaker forced the checkers to move that way, and when he was defeated for Congress in 1890 it was Hanna hero-worship that made McKinley go to the people for indorsement as Governor in '91.

Hanna had an ambition higher than McKinley's for McKinley. It was Hanna who first saw the White House at the end of McKinley's road. Hanna caught a glimpse of it in '92 when Harrison was nominated for the second time, and though McKinley was one of the first of the Middle States Governors to make a trip to Indianapolis to assure Harrison of the Ohio support when the anti-Harrison men began to talk of Blaine, McKinley sat at a dinner given by Hanna to a group of Harrison's opponents at Minneapolis, and heard Hanna discuss the possibility of defeating Harrison in the convention about to open by switching the Harrison opposition from Blaine to McKinley. Hanna was a man of simple, direct methods. He was not troubled with an inflamed and ingrown conscience, and out of his heart his mouth spoke. McKinley sat by and said nothing, for he knew politics. He probably knew that it was a vain hope his friend cherished, and that the nomination of Harrison was on the cards. So when they made McKinley chairman of the convention he spoke glowing words of Harrison and smiled kindly at his friend with the superior smile that politicians give business men who intrude. This is written not to show that McKinley and Hanna were intriguers, but to show that in life humanity is in all of us, and that the greatest and best of men is still a man and not a demigod. A great man is an average man plus some unusual development of one or two faculties. There are no giants in these days, and maybe there never were giants. Maybe there were only stories of giants.

McKinley and Hanna were great men, but they were also average men in the main, and the thing that happened at Minneapolis has happened in miniature at a hundred thousand county conventions and State conventions all over the land. Indeed, probably little happens at the White House that has not been enacted before in every county courthouse in America. The difference between the average run of statesmanship and the average run of peanut politics is merely in the size of the counters and not in the rules of the game.

As Governor of Ohio McKinley was neither a remarkable success nor a failure—he was a good average Governor. But Hanna had made of the ambition to be President a fixed star in McKinley's heaven. The contest for the nomination drew the two men together closer than they had come before.

Hanna built a steel-ribbed, fireproof machine for McKinley in Ohio, the like of which was never known before and may never be known again, for it was held together not by politicians but by business interests. It was a close corporation with the voting stock in the hands of Hanna as general manager. It had one object: a tariff for Protection. McKinley as Governor went on signing requisition papers, appointing State boards, making occasional speeches, and performing the perfunctory duties of his office and keeping out of all issues and entanglements that might embarrass a Presidential candidate. Ohio never had a more cautious Governor. Unconsciously he covered himself with conservatism. Hanna, on the other hand, had released his spirit of combativeness and was giving himself full swing. With the fighting enthusiasm of a gladiator he organized the political syndicate in business circles that named McKinley for President. He opened a branch office in every Northern State and interested equally machine politicians and business men who were beneficiaries of the tariff. He floated his Presidential stock everywhere with a daring and frankness that astounded McKinley's enemies and gave his friends that show of success which is two-thirds of a political battle. In the South Hanna held the mercenary politicians in the hollow of his hand. He minced no words and used no hoity-toity phraseology in dealing with them. Business was business, and that ended it. Probably the only place on earth where Hanna covered the artillery of his blunt language was in McKinley's presence. There Hanna spoke of his bargains as "arrangements," and referred to his deals as "combinations." What McKinley knew and what he did not know about the manipulation of delegates from the South that nominated him for President is, of course, a matter of mere conjecture, but when he was elected he turned the South over to Hanna.

How Men Have Misread Hanna

ALL through the campaign for the first nomination for President McKinley was complacent under his plaster cast of gubernatorial dignity. Days and nights and Sundays he wore the josslike countenance that politicians put on for public functions, until his features became set to it. But in all his dealing with great things, and in all his moving as a real man through real events of world-wide importance during those days of '94 and '95 and '96, Hanna never could assume what has been called the poker face. His mobile lips twitched when his mouth was full of angry words and he spat them out. He glared with his big, frank, hearty eyes, or he smiled with them, and those about him made no mistake in his meaning. Only in this they misread Hanna, and it was cruel and unjust to him: men thought that his ambition for McKinley was ambition for personal power, ambition to control a President of the United States. The power that moved Hanna was fine and strong and clean as a father's love. Hanna worshiped McKinley. That worship was the one great passion of his life. It was utterly unselfish save as Hanna had invested his own reputation as a fighter in it, and had in the outcome of the game a consuming desire to win—for the stake is the largest in all the world.

When Platt, and Quay, and Reed, and the New England contingent of the Republican party changed the issue of the campaign of '96 from the tariff to the gold standard, Hanna, whose first thought was for McKinley's safety, sputtered a momentary protest and accepted the inevitable. McKinley, being a politician and used to sudden changes of figures on the chessboard, calmly ignored his silver speeches and took up the demand for "an honest dollar and a chance to earn it" with the seasoned zeal of an old convert. For McKinley was never rash. He handled himself with automatic poise. And in the campaign for sound money no one was so unruffled as he, who in his day had trod the path of dalliance—though quite circumspcctly, to be sure—that led toward fiat money. But the advocates of sound money trusted McKinley after he became their candidate, and his record did not worry them any more than it worried him. They apparently construed his silver utterances as the Pickwickian deliverances of a gentleman indulging in the harmless pastime of soft-soaping the electorate. McKinley grew into their respect and confidence later, but when the gold standard champions in the Republican party took him they did not think particularly well of their bargain, though it was the best they could do.

Hanna was McKinley's bondsman. And the gold syndicate, which became the holding company of the stock of the tariff syndicate, regarded McKinley in the early days of the campaign of '96 as merely the plant in the vote-making business of which Hanna was general manager. When the two went to Washington, McKinley as President and Hanna as Senator, if the popular opinion of their relations had unconsciously affected Hanna's sense of the real facts McKinley disillusioned his friend quickly. For after the two had gotten John Sherman out of the Senate and into the Cabinet, McKinley was President in fact as well as in name.

There was never a moment after the election of 1896 when Hanna was even fourth assistant President or chief clerk to a deputy. As President, McKinley kept Hanna—as he most of the time kept every other human being—in merely an official relation to him. McKinley was President, and Hanna was Senator from Ohio, and as chairman of the National Republican Committee he was ex-officio Senator from the South. McKinley was a consummate politician.

Clear down to the core of his soul he was in politics. He played politics with Congress—perfectly honest politics, and as clean as the times would permit; he played politics with the people—always deferring to them when he could not persuade them, using them with craft rather than with force; he played politics with his Cabinet—picking its members with an adroitness that displayed his highest genius, so that no member of his Cabinet was indebted to a State boss or dominated by a United States Senator, and might, therefore, choose his subordinates fairly and honestly. And, finally, McKinley played politics with Hanna, his friend. When the Cabinet was formed Hanna found that he had no more influence with it than any other chairman of the National Committee might have had. Flesh and blood would have given Hanna a partnership in the Presidency, which would have been wrong and unjust to the people. But McKinley knew the equities and rules of his game and played fair with the people. He was not selfish; he was not ungrateful for what Hanna had done. But what Hanna had done was for a friend, for a man, not for a President, and the friend's affairs were not matter of prime importance to the President. His duties were purely official.

There are these degrees of intimacy at the White House: to shake hands with the President at a reception—that is the citizen's prerogative; to eat dinner there—which is an official perquisite; to eat luncheon there—which is a politician's royal arch degree; to go there for breakfast—which is the mark of Presidential friendship; to bring your valise and to sleep there—which is a distinction accorded to the Truly Great; and to bring a trunk and get your washing done there—that is to be a member of the household and to be accepted into full fellowship with the nation's ruler. Hanna brought his valise to the White House, but he always left his trunk at the hotel.

Hanna and McKinley were close enough friends to spat, to quarrel in a friendly way, and to wrangle a little. But if there was pouting to be done Hanna always had to do it, and to get over his pout, too, for that matter. But they say the President was always ready to forget, and as for McKinley—the man whom Hanna clove to as to a brother, McKinley whom Hanna addressed sometimes reverently as "William"—it is doubtful if Hanna saw McKinley as often as he wished to see him, and too many times had audiences with the President, whom Hanna did not always like, for the official cast was coating McKinley deeper and deeper as he grew older. He never stepped from his pedestal, not even when he was using his greatest strength and coming into his greatest glory; when the waves of public wrath at the delay of the war with Spain were beating in breakers about the White House. When McKinley, with the vision and courage of genius, was preparing for war and urging peace while the people cursed him for a poltroon he turned to them a calm, bronze face and did not wince under their lashing. It was the face of a ruler; but the man's face and the agony in the man's heart were hidden. With Lincoln at such times it was always the man that men saw; it was ever the grief writhing in his personal soul, not his public sorrow, that the nation caught. Lincoln was a great man; McKinley a great President. Each in times of popular fury was doing in secret what the people desired, and each for the time was compelled to forego the pleasure of confiding to the people his plans, knowing that in the end his would be the honor and the glory; but in his agony Lincoln's face furrowed, and heartache was written all around his closed lips. When McKinley passed through this ordeal in the spring of '98 the President's face did not quiver, whatever the man's soul may have suffered.

The Man and the Master

AND Hanna in that hour was a panic-stricken bondsman, who feared he should have to pay the forfeit. He was for peace. Wall Street was for peace; business everywhere was for peace. Hanna went on record publicly for peace. All that expostulation and unrestrained insistence could do for peace Hanna did. The vigor and simplicity of his nature were never more plainly seen of men than they were in the days before war was declared. But when he saw the inevitable approach he rallied to McKinley and was the President's faithful servant. And if he passed out to the good fellows at the gate an occasional loaf of bread in the form of an army commission or a contract, or a place as director of the Cuban posts, put it down to his gratitude to his friends, to the kindness that was in his frank, honest, brown eyes, rather than to cupidity or greed for spoils. For Hanna was a man who liked to keep out of debt politically, and he regarded a public office as a public trust that would stand considerable watering! But McKinley, who grew intellectually and in knowledge every day of his official life, did what he did in those hurrying days of the war always with clear eyes upon his duty. He was deceived sometimes, and mistaken sometimes, but he knew what the people had a right to expect, and he was ever faithful to the people, so far as a human being may be faithful. His hands were tied with many strings. The people were keen for war, but the politicians were as keen for jobs. Every office under the Government in that war was regarded as a job. Whether the applicant desired to be commander-in-chief of the army or commissary-sergeant, his friends in pushing him regarded the place as a job. The army was stiff-kneed and the navy was rusty; but for all that McKinley and the American people conducted that war with precision and vigor to the end. McKinley handled the soldiers with tact and the people with tact, and in closing up the affair the President handled the civilized world with tact. Hanna would have blurted out his real desire, and did, as far as that goes; but the President chose to let his opinions come from the people and then to appear not as a leader but as a follower of public thought.

This studied indirection must have irritated Hanna, but he was too loyal a friend to show it. He was ever the faithful heart. He was McKinley's guardian rather than his adviser. He was the stronger man, yet he did not dominate. Indeed, there were times when, in McKinley's presence, the bubbling humor of the Senator, his bold recognition of apparent facts, his incisive, unmincing metaphors which revealed his strong convictions and his frank prejudices, were turned by the furtive, bland, impartial McKinley into a kind of obsequious, abashed repression, and Hanna, almost squelched and ill at ease, simmered down from respectful inanition to enthusiastic silence as he watched the President play his game.

Always the Friend in Need

AS MCKINLEY rounded his first term and turned into his second the relations between him and Hanna remained stationary. They did not grow closer, nor did they weaken. Hanna was always welcome at the White House, sometimes as United States Senator, sometimes as National Committee chairman, and often as friend. But he never went there in any other capacity than as friend, however he may have been received. His affection for McKinley never waned. Probably he always thought of him as "William," though he was as chary of that name in public as a schoolgirl is of her first lover's endearments. The President found other advisers, and came to trust their wisdom—for it was of a high order. Mr. Hay, and Mr. Root, and Mr. Knox, and General Wood, and Mr. Charles Emory Smith, and a score of others came into the President's councils. Some of these men liked Hanna; others disliked him. But he had but one friendship, one master passion: that was for McKinley's fame and welfare. He arranged, together with his friends in the Senate, a modus vivendi with "high finance" by the tacit terms of which the trusts were not to be disturbed. Hanna ironed out the wrinkled front of the Senate when it would have frowned at McKinley; Hanna was even ready to pare the horns of Protection that McKinley's reciprocity ideas might have full play. Always he was the friend in need; always his life was centred on McKinley's; always he was the soul of devotion.

He did what he did without rewards and without asking great favors. And the President, whose outlook was always official and large, paid back the kindness Hanna gave with such gentleness and manly gratitude as a man may bestow upon another, and gave no official bric-à-brac that belonged to the people, even if Hanna asked for it. Hanna's friend, Rathbone, when the truth was known about him, got no favors from McKinley; and Bristow, who ferreted out the Cuban crookedness, was shielded from Hanna's wrath. For McKinley was just. He was so just, indeed, so impartial, so colorlessly fair that his personality is elusive. We know men best by their faults, by their little human weaknesses; in the shadow of these their great virtues stand out more clearly. But McKinley had no little vices. He was truthful without being exactly frank, and brave without being sufficiently candid about it for the people to realize it. He was so careful that his style in writing reads like a sheriff's sale notice, full of restrictions and exceptions and painful exactitudes. His whole life seems to have been spent before an audience. He was a public servant continuously for a generation, and became so cautious lest he should tread on a public corn that any private character he may have had was hidden. His life seems as public as the existence of a statue in a park. He turned to marble so easily that there were no warts and imperfections to ignore when animation left the clay. His very deathbed was as it should have been.

The realest man in it all did not seem to be the dying President but the stocky little man who came in clicking his cane, and walked over to the bed, and looked long and lovingly at the stricken figure in stupor, and finally broke out with a horrible sob: "William—William—don't you know me?" That was real; that was anguish. A man who is strong and virile has strong emotions, but generally has strength to check them. But Hanna cried like a child at McKinley's deathbed. His soul was smitten with a thunderbolt of woe. He has lived these two years without his heart in life. He has been a broken wheel, whirling wildly at times and off the balance. Age has crept upon him and found him powerless to go on. For his heart, and all that made him the fine figure that his contemporaries have come to love, the spirit that moved him above things earthly, lies buried in the tomb at Canton. For he probably knew, even if from afar, the heart that no one else knew, the real soul that hid itself from men under the cover of official garments—the soul that shone in kindness and gentleness through all the life of William McKinley.

OLD GORGON GRAHAM

By the Author of Letters from a Self-Made Merchant to His Son

Copyright, 1904, by George Horner Lorimer. Copyright in Great Britain

A CASE OF ROOT HOG OR DIE

VI—From John Graham, at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York, to his son, Pierrepont, at the Union Stock Yards, Chicago. The young man has written describing the magnificent wedding presents that are being received, and hinting discreetly that it would not come amiss if he knew what shape the old man's was going to take, as he needs the money.

NEW YORK, December 12, 189—

Dear Pierrepont: These fellows at the branch house here have been getting altogether too blamed refined to suit me in their ideas of what's a fair day's work, so I'm staying over a little longer than I had intended, in order to ring the rising bell for them and to get them back into good Chicago habits. The manager started in to tell me that you couldn't do any business here before nine or ten in the morning—and I raised that boy myself!

We had a short season of somethings that wasn't exactly prayer but was just as earnest, and I think he sees the error of his ways. He seemed to feel that just because he was getting a fair share of the business I ought to be satisfied, but I don't want any half-sports out gunning with me. It's the fellow that settles himself in his blind before the ducks begin to fly who gets everything that's coming to his decoys. I reckon we'll have to bring this man back to Chicago and give him a beef house where he has to report at five before he can appreciate what a soft thing it is to get down to work at eight.

I'm mighty glad to hear you're getting so many wedding presents that you think you'll have enough to furnish your house, only you don't want to fingermark them looking to see if a hundred-thousand-dollar check from me ain't slipped in among them, because it ain't.

I intend to give you a present, all right, but there's a pretty wide margin for guessing between a hundred thousand dollars and the real figures. And you don't want to feel too glad about the presents, either, because you're going to find out that furnishing a house with wedding presents is equivalent to furnishing it on the installment plan. Along about the time you want to buy a go-cart for the twins, you'll discover that you'll have to make Tommy's busted old baby-carriage do, because you've got to use the money to buy a tutti-frutti ice-cream spoon for the young widow who sent you a doormat with "Welcome" on it. And when she gets it the young widow will call you that idiotic Mr. Graham, because she's going to have sixteen other tutti-frutti ice-cream spoons, and her doctor's told her that if she eats sweet things she'll have to go in the front door like a piano—sideways.

Then when you get the junk sorted over and your house furnished with it you're going to sit down to dinner on some empty soap-boxes, with the soup in cut-glass finger bowls, and the fish on a hand-painted smoking set, and the meat on dinky, little egg-shell salad plates, with ice-cream forks and fruit knives to eat with. You'll spend most of that meal wondering why somebody didn't send you one of those hundred and sixteen piece five-dollar-ninety-eight sets of china. While I don't mean to say that the average wedding present carries a curse instead of a blessing, it could usually repeat a few cuss words if it had a retentive memory.

Speaking of wedding presents and hundred-thousand-dollar checks naturally brings to mind my old friend Hamilton Huggins—Old Ham they called him at the Yards—and the time he gave his son, Percival, a million dollars.

Take him by and large, Ham was as slick as a greased pig. Before he came along the left of the beef hearts went into the fertilizer tanks, but he reasoned out that they weren't really tough, but that their firmness was due to the fact that the meat in them was naturally condensed, and so he started putting them out in his celebrated condensed mincemeat at ten cents a pound. Took his pigs' livers, too, and worked 'em up into a genuine Strasburg pâté de foies gras that made the wild geese honk when they flew over his packing-house. Discovered that a little chopped cheek-meat at two cents a pound was a blamed sight healthier than chopped pork at six. Reckoned that by running twenty-five per cent. of it into his pork sausage he saved a hundred thousand people every year from becoming cantankerous old dyspeptics.

Ham was simply one of those fellows who not only have convolutions in their brains, but kinks and bow knots as well, and who can believe that any sort of a lie is gospel truth just so it is manufactured and labeled on their own premises. I confess I ran out a line of those pigs' liver pâtés myself, but I didn't do it because I was such a patriot that I couldn't stand seeing the American flag insulted by a lot of Frenchmen getting a dollar for a ten-cent article, and simply because geese have smaller livers than pigs.

WORE A CIGARETTE IN HIS FACE

For all Old Ham was so shrewd at the Yards he was one of those fellows who begin losing their common sense at the office door, and who reach home doddering and blithering. Had a fool wife with the society bug in her head, and as he had the one-of-our-leading-citizens bug in his, they managed between them to raise a lovely warning for a Sunday-school superintendent in their son, Percival.

Percy was mommer's angel boy with the sunny curls, who was to be raised a gentleman and to be "shielded from the vulgar surroundings and coarse associations of her husband's youth," and he was proud popper's pet, whose good times weren't going to be spoiled by a narrow-minded old brute of a father, or whose talents weren't going to be smothered in poverty, the way the old man's had been. No, sir ee, Percy was going to have all the money he wanted, with the whisky bottle always in sight on the side-board and no limit on any game he wanted to sit in, so that he'd grow up a perfect little gentleman and know how to use things instead of abusing them.

I want to say right here that I've heard a good deal of talk in my time about using whisky, and I've met a good many thousand men who bragged when they were half-loaded that they could quit at any moment, but I've never met one of these fellows who would while the whisky held out. It's been my experience that when a fellow begins to brag that he can quit he's reached the point where he can't.

Naturally, Percy had hardly got the pap-rag out of his mouth before he learned to smoke cigarettes, and he could cuss like a little gentleman before he went into long pants. Took the four years sporting course at Harvard, with a postgraduate year of drawpoker and natural history—observing the habits and the speed of the ponies in their native haunts. Then, just to prove that he had paresis, Old Ham gave him a million dollars and a partnership in his business.

"TRIED TO BUST YOUR POOR OLD FATHER"

Percy started in to learn the business at the top—absorbing as much of it as he could find room for between ten and four, with two hours out for lunch—but he never got down below the frosting. The one thing that Old Ham wouldn't let him touch was the only thing about the business which really interested Percy—the speculating end of it. But everything else he did went with the old gentleman, and he was always bragging that Percy was growing up into a big, broad-gauged merchant. He got mighty mad with me when I told him that Percy was just a ready-made success, who was so small that he rattled round in his seat, and that he'd better hold in his horses, as there were a good many humps in the road ahead.

Old Ham was a sure-thing packer, like myself, and let speculating alone, never going into the market unless he had the goods or knew where he could get them; but when he did plunge into the pit he usually climbed out with both hands full of money and a few odd thousand-dollar bills sticking in his hair. So when he came to me one day and pointed out that Prime Steam Lard at eight cents for the November delivery, and the West alive with hogs, was a crime against the consumer, I felt inclined to agree with him, and we took the bear side of the market together.

Somehow, after we had gone short a big line, the law of supply and demand seemed to quit business. There were plenty of hogs out West, and all the packers were making plenty of lard, but people seemed to be frying everything they ate, and using lard in place of hair-oil, for the Prime Steam moved out as fast as it was made. Then, too, the market sucked up our short sales and hollered for more, like a six-months' shoot at the trough. Pound away as we would, the November option moved up slowly to 8½, to 9, to 9½. Then, with delivery day only six weeks off, it jumped overnight to 10, and closed firm at 12¼. We stood to lose a little over a million apiece at that, and no knowing what the crowd that was under the market would gouge us for in the end.

Old Ham and I got together as soon as 'Change closed that day, and gave ourselves one guess apiece to find out where we were at, and both guessed right—we were cornered; but as soon as we found out how high up in the air we were, we began to look for the fire-escapes. We had a little over a month to get together the lard to deliver on our short sales or else pay up, and we hadn't had enough experience in the paying-up business to feel like engaging in it.

That afternoon we wired our agents through the West to start everything that looked like a hog toward Chicago, and our men in the East to ship us every tierce of Prime Steam they could lay their hands on. Then we started in to try out every bit of hog fat, from a grease spot up, that we could find in the country. And all the time the price kept climbing on us like a nigger going up a persimmon tree, till it was rising seventeen cents.

So far the bull crowd had managed to keep their identity hidden, and we'd been pretty modest about telling the names of the big bears, because we weren't very proud of the way we'd been caught napping, and because Old Ham was mighty anxious that Percy shouldn't know that his safe old father had been using up the exception to his rule of no speculation.

It was a near thing for us, but the American hog had responded nobly—and a good many other critters as well, I suspect—and when it came on toward delivery day we found that we had the actual lard to turn over on our short contracts, and some to spare. But Ham and I had lost a little fat ourselves, and we had learned a whole lot about the iniquity of selling goods that you haven't got, even when you do it with the benevolent intention of cheapening an article to the consumer.

Ham and I got together at his office in the Board of Trade building to play off the finals with the bull crowd. We'd had inspectors busy all night passing the lard which we'd gathered together and which was arriving by boatloads and trainloads. Then, before 'Change opened, we passed the word around through our brokers that there wasn't any big short interest left, and to prove it they pointed to the increase in the stocks of Prime Steam in store and gave out the real figures on what was still in transit. By the time the bell rang for trading on the floor we had built the hottest sort of a fire under the market, and thirty minutes after the opening the price of the November option had melted down flat to twelve cents.

We gave the bulls a breathing space there, for we knew we had them all rounded up nicely in the killing pens, and there was no hurry, especially as that might bring on a bad panic and a lot of unnecessary failures. But on toward noon, when things looked about right, we jumped twenty brokers into the pit, all selling at once and offering in any sized lots for which they could find takers. It was like setting off a pack of firecrackers—biff! bang! bang! our brokers gave it to them, and when the smoke cleared away the bits of that busted corner were scattered all over the pit, and there was nothing left for us to do but to pick up our profits; for we had swung a loss of millions over to the other side of the ledger.

Just as we were sending word to our brokers to steady the market so as to prevent failures, the door of the private office flew open, and in bounced Mr. Percy, looking like a hound dog that had lapped up a custard pie while the cook's back was turned and is hunting for a handy bed to hide under. Had even let his cigarette go out—he wore one in his face as regularly as some fellows wear a pink in their buttonhole—and it was drooping from his lower lip, instead of sticking up under his nose in the old sporty, sassy way.

"Oh, gov'ner!" he cried as he slammed the door behind him; "the market's gone to hell."

"Quite so, my son, quite so," nodded Old Ham approvingly; "it's the bottomless pit to-day, all right, all right."

I saw it coming, but it came hard. Percy sputtered and stuttered and swallowed it once or twice, and then it broke loose in:

"And oh! gov'ner, I'm caught—in a horrid hole—you've got to help me out!"

"Eh! what's that!" exclaimed the old man, losing his just-after-a-hearty-meal expression. "What's that—caught—speculating, after what I've said to you! Don't tell me that you're one of that bull crowd—don't you dare do it, sir." I cheered up mightily to hear the old man take this tone, because it began to look as if the cook had caught the dog by the tail and was going to pull him out for a beating.

"Ye-es," and Percy's voice was scared back to a whisper; "yes; and what's more, I'm the whole bull crowd—the Great Bull they've all been talking about and guessing about."

Great Scott! but I felt sick. Here we'd been, like two pebbles in a rooster's gizzard, grinding up a lot of corn that we weren't going to get any good of. I itched to go for that young man myself, but I knew this was one of those holy moments between father and son when an outsider wants to pull his tongue back into its cyclone cellar. And when I looked at Ham I saw that no help was needed, for the old man was evidently coming out of his twenty-five years' trance

(Continued on Page 17)

An American in New York

BY OPIE READ

ALONG with the education of the past he had a shrewd eye for the present, and he called himself an American in New York. In the great Stocks-Bonds Hotel, where the lamps burn at midnight, he was unconsciously conspicuous as slowly he strode down the corridor known as Millionaire Lane, where, in the evening, were gathered the wealthier members of the Stock Exchange, speculation polite in full dress, with many a bow and sallow smile, but just as heartless and as replete with human greed as when on the "floor" in Wall Street, beneath the cold eye of the gray-bearded old chairman sitting high in his marble balcony.

Every one turned to look at the tall, middle-aged American, so expressive of a quiet home somewhere remote from the politer forms of throat-cutting, and so different was he from the average man, so pronounced a physical reminiscence of the considerate past in this swiftly-gestured present, that the elegant idlers seated along the alabaster wall regarded him in the light of an amusing discovery.

A student of the English classics would not have strained much to pronounce him a latter-day Sir Roger, marveling and moralizing in the great city. Some one had heard him say to a bell-boy that he lived out in America and that this was his first trip abroad.

Editor's Note.—This is the first of a series of papers by Mr. Read in which he gives a Western view of New York.

In the Stocks-Bonds not all, however, was the head on the froth of aimless life, for here where local fashion and foreign decoration paraded, admired of the imitative and the thoughtless, were also gathered the bone of gigantic industry and the muscle of fearless adventure, organizers of mighty corporations, and travelers who from the backs of trumpeting elephants had fought the striped terror of the jungle. From Arizona and from Mexico had come men with mining stocks, financial carpet-baggers, for in many a gripsack was there a gold brick wrapped in convincing silk. It was a world within itself, the Stocks-Bonds Hotel, a world of apparent opulence, for obvious poverty did not peep in at the door.

Off from the gay halls was a Turkish smoking room. Here nicotine broke through convention. Stranger struck match for stranger and handed it to him. This meant, "You may ask me about the stock market and I will genially mislead you." In this place, a twilight amid rich hangings, the American soon established himself, the centre of a social commonwealth. Early in his career as a member of this colony he laughed with an outburst so loud that a London porter, passing through the room, halted and stared at him.

"How much was that worth?" the American inquired. The flunky begged "pardon." "I want to know how much that laugh is likely to have damaged you—the hearing of it? But I want to tell you, sir, that, along with my other baggage, I've brought with me a few of my natural habits." Then a considerate thought struck him. "But I reckon you've got your own habits, too. Here's fifty cents, and in future, when you hear me laugh, take to your heels."

"I will do so, sir," said the porter, pocketing the fifty cents without the suggestion of a smile; and ever afterward he kept his word.

It was a matter of recognized necessity to call the American Colonel. He soon became a sort of favorite with ladies. They liked to listen to his stories, and he it known that, with two continents striving to minister to her whims, the average woman is more nearly natural than the average man. They all of them scream when they encounter a mouse, the farce-comedies tell us, and their comments upon the appearance of a grizzly bear are almost uniformly the same. The American, whom I shall sometimes call the Colonel, was to them a sort of grizzly bear, captured a long time ago but in a softened way retaining all of the most interesting of his wild and mountainous manners.

"IN FUTURE, WHEN YOU HEAR ME LAUGH, TAKE TO YOUR HEELS"

"Why do you call yourself an American in New York?" inquired Mrs. Flashroll, wife of Judge Flashroll, who with much nipping and a great deal of tucking managed to live for a few months of the year at the Stocks-Bonds.

"Because, madam, I have lived nearly all over America, and this is the only town that puts me in mind of a country I have never seen. Why, the other day I was near the mountain range where Nassau trails into Broad Street, and I saw an American flag floating from the top of an ancient building. I have heard men say how the old flag, seen suddenly in foreign ports, made them feel, and it wasn't hard to persuade myself that I felt just about that way. So in I goes to offer my congratulations; and I asked if the American consul was in. The fellow that I spoke to pretended not to understand. 'The American consul?' said he. 'Why, we have no American consul here.' 'Is that a fact?' I replied. 'Then i'gad, I'm farther away from home than I thought I was.'

The men winked and the women smiled. 'We never know when you are—are—well, guying us,' said Mrs. Flashroll.

The American arose and bowed. 'Madam,' said he, 'I never guy a lady.'

'How long have you been here, Colonel?'

'Madam, when a man is abroad he doesn't somehow have a very good hold on time. It may seem longer or shorter than it is. I will remark, however, that I am here on my wedding journey.'

'Your wedding journey! Why, where is your wife?'

'Well, that is to be explained. Years ago, when I married, I was too low in the financial scale to think of a bridal tour, but my wife was broad-minded and did not complain. However, we didn't forget it; no, madam, we kept it endearingly in mind, hoping and working for the time when we should be able to stand the expense of such a trip. Well, the time came at last, a week or so ago. The children were settled and I had made rather an advantageous sale of property, so I says, 'Mother, get your things ready and we'll take that bridal tour.' 'Where to?' she asks, and I scratched my head. 'Well, say New York,' but she shakes her head. 'No, don't care to go there; don't know anybody, and I have heard that they ain't at all sociable. Mrs. Vance, over at Deerlick, was there two months, a-visiting her son, and didn't get acquainted with anybody to speak of, nor to speak to, for that matter. I believe I'd rather go back to Mount Sterling, Kentucky, where I was raised.' So, madam, we agreed that she should go there and I should come here, but have it understood that we both were on our wedding tours.'

A smile went round. The woman asked him if he were a Southerner, a soothing flattery to one born in the South, and he answered that he was, originally, having been born in Kentucky; 'and while,' said he, 'I continue to have been born in that State, yet I have lived nearly everywhere in America and regard myself in the light of a nationalist.'

'But you don't like New York.'

He gave her what in a poker game would have looked like the propitiating smile of a winner. 'Ah, madam, that's where you misjudge me. It is not for me to dislike any part of the Master's footstool, but I don't know that I am commanded not to criticise one or more of the legs on which the stool stands. There are many things here that are most un-American to me—not a want of politeness, I assure you, for that is as often characteristic of an ignoramus as of a statesman, but a certain and I might say a most pronounced and eager strife to get away from the democratic customs of our fathers. But I am not one who believes that the world is growing worse or that the young man of to-day is not of as good fibre as I was at his age. The fact is that the youngster of to-day knows about twice as much as I did, but this young fellow, contrary to the opinion hemmed in on this narrow island, is not wholly nor in large part confined to the city of New York. Six weeks west of Manhattan teach him more than six years do here. All that is necessary in this life is not to commit Broadway to memory from one end to the other. A man may do that and still miss nearly all the immortal beauties of Shakespeare. And that reminds me. I came here expecting to see Shakespeare played, but am told that they have sent him back to the country where they say he belongs. Writers that never saw a wild tree—by which he meant a tree not confined in a tub or nurtured in a park—' find fault with his shrubbery, madam. They say he was rude in speech, and so was old Jeremiah, but i'gad, they haven't beat him very far yet. But I reckon that man and woman, not only in New York but in nearly all parts of the country, have become too busy to listen to wisdom.'

The men smiled as at an old daguerreotype and the women wondered if he were guying them. As for himself, he sat in the quiet ecstasy of an inward laugh, with so slight a tinge of mirth upon his face as to hide from any but a master's eye the truth of bubbling fun behind a gravestone countenance.

Amid the changes which shall be wrought by the years to come it may be hard to believe that this man ever existed. The wiping out of strongly marked characteristics, of the sinewy breed that made politics a religion and journalism a personal matter, that stamped the American as an original product upon the old earth, may obliterate individuality and world-garb man in the assorted thought of the proper and expected mind. In the fiction of the near future he may be sneered at as the reproachful crudity of a raw civilization.

"I SHALL NOT FORGET THE SMILE ON THE FACE OF A BRUTE SITTING AT A TABLE"

but in the far-off years, found in some quaint book, he will be marveled at and admired for his strength, his amusing gallantry, his notion about women, his generosity, his love of country, his knack for story-telling. The storyteller was born in the twilight of the early ages, and the nearer we approach that questionable goal, higher civilization, the weaker grow the narrator's words and the less do we pay heed to him. They say that the art of telling stories, like that of oratory, is suffering to the extent of threatened extinction, and it may be accepted as a truth that the story-teller has departed from New York. Where once with his companions he ate his lamb-chop in the dusk of comfort's quiet haunt there has been reared the towering monument to commerce. An old city where once lurked poetic fancies, where with pot of ale old Bonner's Bohemian sat, goose-quilling his heroine into desperate straits, striving toward the proper point of thrill, "to be continued"—that old city has been pulled down, and those of its romancers who are not buried for the most part in unmarked graves are wanderers in the West. Men are impatient of their romances; editors do not want them, and they stand, melancholy figures, talking to the past. But the American in New York was not a writer of romances such as common-sense doomed to an early death. Out of the past and from the silently grinding mill of his own invention he drew stories to enliven the present. And so it was that day after day he sat in the Turkish room, commenting upon what he had seen during the past few hours, always ready with his impressions which generally led to anecdote or narrative. Like your true story-teller he did not wait for a large audience.

"Speaking again of the drama in New York," he said, "I am forced to announce the fact that there isn't any drama here. The whole thing is a tune and a jig. You are passing through what might be called the night sweats of the drama. Dignity has turned loose, sir, to dance a breakdown. The worse the show is the better you are pleased. If a fellow comes along with a new sort of flip-flap he is a hero. Your rhyme is kidney-footed and your dancing is vulgar. A pair of blackened eyes and a mouth made at the audience take the place of dramatic action. In your tastes you haven't the excuse of a couple of fellows I saw one night standing before the opera house in Little Rock, Arkansas. A bill announced that John MacCullough was playing Virginius. These two fellows halted and looked up the stairway. 'Why, Bill, here's a show.' 'Ah, hab, but what sort of a show is it?

Want to go up?' The other fellow stared at the bill. 'Let's see if we can make out what it means. Sleight o' hand, I reckon. Seen a man at a schoolhouse t'other night, out our way, that I'll bet can swallow two knives to his one. We've seen all he can do. That's a sick hoss at the wagon yard. Let's go round that.' Those fellows had something to keep them away from the real drama, for I want to tell you that out where they lived a sick horse meant a good deal. But here a sick poodle would serve. Of course, in my country, America, I mean, from a time almost ancient we have looked to New York for the stamp of her approval; but either one of two things must happen if this continues: we've got to lose our recollection of what is good or New York must revise her judgment."

"I suppose," mischievously remarked one of the ladies, "that, after the manner of the early English, you would keep women off the stage altogether."

"Oh, no, madam. If the drama at the present time showed any signs of preservation I should say that it was largely due to woman. Woman is as a general thing more convincing than man, and without delicious illusion the play is but impotent talk. An instance: Rather late last night I dropped into a Broadway restaurant. There were but few customers, rendering it easy to pick out personages whom I thought worthy of study—a habit of mine, sir," and he nodded at a man who had just drawn up to join the listeners. "And I noticed particularly a gentleman and a lady sitting at a table not far away. But would you believe it, while I was looking a quarrel arose between them? It did, and the man, in a most undignified and, I might say, ungentlemanly manner, arose, snatched up his gloves which lay beside a plate, and in a huff departed. The lady was much embarrassed, I assure you, and I saw clearly that she didn't know what to do; and I should have hastened to minister to her in this the hour of her distress had I possessed the honor of her acquaintance."

"What did you do, Colonel?"

The question was asked by a woman. "Madam, I don't know what I should have done had not something happened at the critical moment. She came over and spoke to me. First let me note her appearance. I recall in a poem somewhere—'And her eye was of that tinge of the sky when the trout leaps quickest to catch the fly.' That was her eye—blue as the sky that must lie beyond our vision; and her hair was black, a rain-cloud shredded and silkened, and her voice as she spoke with sweet hesitation was almost hushed in its own trembling melody. 'Sir,' she said—and I was on my feet in a moment, I assure you—'sir, will you be kind enough to see me to my carriage?' Would I? Her chariot was waiting just without, I gathered from a few notes of stray music which she dropped, and she wanted no aid except to be seen to it; she had her own purse, she somehow told me, swinging it by a golden chain. The unfortunate quarrel with her—but no matter, the carriage was waiting and she would go home alone. I bowed, gave her my arm and we walked out, and I shall not forget the smile on the face of a brute sitting at a table. Well, the carriage stood at the curb, just a little ways up the street. The driver opened the door and she got in. 'Oh, I am so much obliged to you,' she said with a little whimper as sweet as the gurgle of June water. 'I really don't know what I should have done without you. James, you may drive to—Wait a moment. Oh, yes, give me my purse, please.' The latter remark was directed to me. 'Your purse? I haven't it.'

"Oh, yes, I gave it to you."

"I beg your pardon, but you are mistaken."

"Oh, no, I'm not. Don't trifle with me when I placed so much confidence in you. Give me my purse, please."

"And then the cabman spoke up: 'Give the dame her pocketbook, or I'll call the cop.'

"There was a fine predicament for an American away from his friends. Swearing upon my honor would have availed nothing."

"But what did you do, Colonel?"

"I beg your pardon, here it is," I said, and I took out my own pocketbook and handed it to her, and snatching it eagerly she fell back into the carriage and was driven away."

"Your own pocketbook! And was there anything in it?"

"Madam, it was stuffed full—of pieces of goods that my wife had given me to match. Ah, she was convincing, and i'gad, she saved me a world of trouble."

How Mr. Hickok Came to Cheyenne—By Alfred Henry Lewis

The Epic of an Unsung Ulysses

WITHIN two days after his arrival Mr. Hickok was established in the best society of Cheyenne. This, when one reflects upon the iron-bound exclusiveness of Cheyenne first circles, should talk loudly in Mr. Hickok's favor. It was something whereof any gentleman might be proud. The Inter-Ocean, being that hostelry which he honored with his custom, was as his home; and he stood good for a dozen stacks of blues at any faro table in the camp. And this, mind you, in days when Cheyenne confidence came forward slowly, and the Cheyenne hand was not outstretched to every paltry individual who got off the stage.

Two weeks prior to these exaltations, Mr. Hickok, then of Kansas City, might have been seen walking in that portion of Main Street known as Battle Row. For one of his optimism Mr. Hickok's mood showed blue and dull. One might tell it by a brooding eye and the droop which invested his mustache with a gravity not properly its own. Moreover, there was further evidence to prove the low spirits of Mr. Hickok. His hair, long as the hair of a woman, and which in lighter moments fell in a blond cataract about his yard-wide shoulders, was knotted away beneath his hat.

For myself, I do not praise long hair in the case of any man. But Mr. Hickok had much in his defense. He had let his hair grow in years when the transaction of his destinies gave him a deal to do with Indians. The American savage possesses theories that yield neither to evidence nor argument. He believes that every paleface who cuts short his hair does so in craven denial of a scalp to what enemy should rise victorious over him. Such harehearts he contemns. On the guileless other hand, he holds that the long-haired man is a warrior bold, flaunting defiance with every toss of his mane. That long-haired one may rob and cheat and swindle and cuff and kick your savage; the latter will neither murmur nor lift hand against him. For is not he who robs and cheats and swindles and cuffs and kicks a chief, and is not his flowing hair a franchise so to do? There lurks a dividend in hair for any who traffics with your savage. Wherefore, in an hour of aboriginal commerce Mr. Hickok encouraged a hirsute luxuriance in the name of trade. Later, he continued it for the sake of habit and old days. That much for Mr. Hickok's hair—as plentiful and as coarse as a pony's. Let me repeat, that to find it furled from view was notice that his soul was sad.

What should be it to prey upon the sensibilities of Mr. Hickok? Kansas City was a town of mud and dust and hill and hollow that quenched all happiness and drove the male inhabitants to drink. Was it that to bear him down? No; if it were mere environment Mr. Hickok would have made his escape to regions where the sun was shining.

Not to run the trail too far, Mr. Hickok was ruminating the loss of his final dollar, which had fled across a faro layout in the Marble Hall Saloon. As he strolled dejectedly in Battle Row he couldn't have told where his next week's board was coming from, not counting his next week's drinks. It was the dismal present, promising a dismal future, which exhaled those mists to take the curl from Mr. Hickok's mustache and teach his hair to hide beneath his hat. A short-haired man may be penniless and still command respect; a long-haired man without a dollar is a creature to be laughed at.

Having nothing to engage him but his gloom, Mr. Hickok glanced upward and across the street where, over the fourth story windows, an Odd Fellows' sign was bolted. The sign was painted black upon white. The "O" that stood as initial of "Odd" showed wood-color inside the black.

It was years before when, to please a bevy of tender tourists and by permission of Mr. Speers, then chief of police, Mr. Hickok emptied his six-shooters into the centre of that "O." It was a finished piece of shooting; the tourists told of it about their clubs when safe in the East again. The "O," where the original white had been splintered into wood-color by those dozen bullets it had stopped, showed plain as print. Mr. Hickok sighed as he considered his handiwork.

Mr. Hickok did not sigh because of any former accuracy with pistols; but he recalled how on that fine occasion—in contrast to present bankruptcy—he harbored $1400 in his clothes. He had beaten the bank at Old Number Three, and was rich and gay in consequence.

"I think I shoot better when I've got a roll."

MR. HICKOK WAS NOT OVER-QUICK AT WRITTEN ENGLISH

Thus murmured Mr. Hickok as he meditated on that miracle of the guns, done seven years before. Mr. Hickok might have extended his surmise: a man does all things better when he has a roll.

The panorama of life had been moving swiftly for Mr. Hickok. Two years before, he was marshal of Hays and had shot his way into general confidence. In an evil hour a trio of soldiers came over from the fort, led by one Lanigan, and took drunken umbrage at Mr. Hickok's hair. This rudeness touched Mr. Hickok tenderly, and in reproof thereof he snuffed out those three as gallery Frenchmen snuff candles at ten paces.

Since there arose carpers to say that Mr. Hickok went too far in those homicides, he laid down his trust and removed to Abilene. Mr. Hickok was welcomed with spread arms by Abilene. Its marshal had just been gathered home through the efforts of a cowboy with a genius for firearms. Abilene offered the vacant place to Mr. Hickok, and to encourage acceptance showed him where it had hanged the cowboy. Mr. Hickok accepted, drew on the public purse for five hundred rounds of ammunition, and entered upon his duties.

Mr. Hickok reigned as marshal eight months, and kept Abilene like a church. Then he put a bullet through the head of Mr. Coe, a gentleman whose pleasure it had been to go upon tri-weekly sprees and leave everything on both sides of the street.

As on that day in Hays, there were local narrowists toiling reproach upon Mr. Hickok. They said the affair might have been sufficiently managed by the simple process of bending a gun over Mr. Coe's head; the dead gentleman had yielded to such treatment on former occasions. They declared that the intemperate haste of Mr. Hickok had eliminated from Abilene one who spent his money with both hands; the taking off of Mr. Coe might conduce to communal peace; it was none the less a blow at Abilene prosperity.

Mr. Hickok, made heartsore by such mean strictures and weary with complaints which found sordid footing in a lust for gain, gave up his marshalship of Abilene as he had given up the post in Hays, and again wandered abroad in search of better fortune.

About the time he shook the Abilene dust from his moccasins there came to Mr. Hickok's hand a proposal from Mr. Cody to join that gentleman in the production of a spirited drama. It was to be a drama descriptive of the Arcadian West; one wherein stages were robbed, maidens rescued, and Indians put to death. Mr. Hickok in real life had for long been familiar with every fraction of the stage business; the lines he could learn in a night. Mr. Cody was confident that Mr. Hickok would take instant part in that drama and do it without rehearsal. If Mr. Hickok accepted, the financial side should be framed and phrased to meet his views. His social life, so Mr. Cody explained, should be one of splendor and Eastern luxury.

Mr. Hickok, pausing only to ruin himself at faro-bank, took up the proffer of Mr. Cody. He journeyed East, and found that excellent personage sojourning at the Brevoort House in New York.

"Where's your trunk?" asked Mr. Cody, as he grasped Mr. Hickok's hand.

"Haven't any," returned Mr. Hickok, whose trunk had been left to keep a boarding-house in countenance. "But I've brought my guns." This last hopefully.

"That's right," observed Mr. Cody, whom nothing was ever known to daunt. "While a gentleman may be without a change of linen, he should never let his wardrobe sink so low that it leaves him without a change of guns."

Mr. Hickok was not a permanency in the theatres. His was a serious nature, and there abode much behind the footlights to irk the soul of him. For one stifling matter, he was allowed nothing lethal wherewith to feed his six-shooters. Blanks by the hundreds he might have; but no bullets.

Now this, in a blind sort of way, told upon Mr. Hickok as something irreligious. A Colt's .45 was not a joke; its mechanism had not been connived in any spirit of facetiousness. It was hardware for life and death; it owned a mission; and to make of it a bauble and a tinsel thing smote upon Mr. Hickok as sacrilege.

And, then, to shoot over the heads of folk shook his faith in himself. It was as though he mocked the heavens! In good truth, Mr. Hickok never did this last. It was his wont to empty his weapons right and left at the legs of Indian-seeming supers.

The practice was not lacking in elements of certain excellence. The powder burned the supers and brought yells which were real from those adjuncts of the drama. In that way was the public gratified and the integrity of the stage upheld.

But the supers objected, and refused to go on with Mr. Hickok. They might love their art, but not to that extent. It was the rock on which they split. Mr. Hickok would not aim high, and the burned ones would take no part in the presentation unless he did. The situation became strained. As a finale, after bitter words had been spoken on both sides, Mr. Hickok quit the mimic world and returned to a life that, though it numbered its drawbacks, might make the boast that it was real. It was then he came to Kansas City, there to experience many ebbing, flowing nights at faro-bank, with that final ebb adverting to, and which left him dollar-stranded, as described.

We left Mr. Hickok in Battle Row thinking on the strangeness of things. Let us get back to him with speed; I warrant him one to notice a too long neglect and desperately resent it.

Mr. Hickok, having sufficiently surveyed his bullet-work of another day as set forth by the Odd Fellows' emblem, was about to resume his walk, when a telegraph boy rushed up. His rush over, the urchin gazed upon Mr. Hickok with the utmost satisfaction for the space of thirty seconds. Then he took a message from his book.

"Be you Mr. Hickok?" he asked.

"Yes, my boy," replied Mr. Hickok blandly. Mr. Hickok was tolerant of youth.

"Mr. Wild Bill Hickok?"

Mr. Hickok frowned; he disliked the ferocious prefix. It had been granted him, by certain romanticists with a bent to be fantastic, for deeds of erratic daring done long before. It was a step in titles the more strange, perhaps, since Mr. Hickok was not baptized William but James.

But "Wild Bill" they made it, and "Wild Bill" it remained; albeit, in deference to Mr. Hickok's known wishes —he once made them plain by shooting a glass of whisky from the hand of a gentleman who had called him Wild Bill, to that gentleman's disturbance and a loss to him besides of one drink—he was never so named except behind his back. When folk referred to him they called him Wild Bill; when they addressed him they did so as Mr. Hickok. The moment that the world and Mr. Hickok understood each other on this touchy point of titles every sign of friction ceased. The compromise won tacit adoption; and everybody went satisfied, since everybody went not without his partial way.

Mr. Hickok tore open the message, while the boy who had brought it admired him to the hilt. The message was long, from which Mr. Hickok sagaciously deduced it to be important. Mr. Hickok was not over-quick with written English; he had been called in the theatres a "slow study." To expedite affairs, Mr. Hickok went at once to the signature. This was intelligent enough. Any man as a rule could give you every word of any eight-page letter he receives by merely glancing at the signature. This will prove peculiarly the case when the signature is a lady's.

However, this time the rule failed. Mr. Hickok, though he knew the name, was driven to wade through the communication before he could come by even a glint of its purport. This he did slowly and painfully, feeling his way from word to word as though fording a strange and turbid stream. At last, when he made it out, Mr. Hickok's face came brightly forth from the shadows like the sun from out a cloud. Evidently the news was good.

Mr. Hickok glanced again at the name. It was that of a generous man whose life he had saved. Lest you gather unjustly some red and dripping picture of Mr. Hickok as one to whom the slaughter of his fellows was as the air he breathed, it should be shown that he had saved many lives. The record of this truth would gratify Mr. Hickok were he here to read it, for he often remembered it in conversation.

"If I've took life," Mr. Hickok would remark defensively, "I've frequent saved life. Likewise, I've saved a heap more than I've took. That's straight; the world's ahead by me. If you'll foot up the figgers you'll see I've got lives comin' to me right now."

What the saved one who was grateful said was this: He had staked out a claim in the Deadwood district; the assay showed it full of yellow promise. Mr. Hickok was to be half owner. Mr. Hickok was to meet the grateful one in Cheyenne. Incidentally, the grateful one had notified the American National to cash Mr. Hickok's draft for two hundred dollars, so that poverty, should such have Mr. Hickok in its coils—which it had—might not deter him from proceeding to Cheyenne at once.

Nothing could have better dovetailed with the worn destinies of Mr. Hickok for their rehabilitation. Within thirty minutes he had drawn those two hundred dollars; in forty he had sent three messages. The first was to the grateful one, promising instant appearance in Cheyenne. The others were of grimmer purpose, and went respectively to Abilene and Hays. These latter were meant to clear the honor of Mr. Hickok.

When Mr. Hickok went into the drama there broke out in Hays and Abilene a deal of invidious comment. There were folk of bilious fancy and unguarded lip who went saying that Mr. Hickok had fled to the footlights as a refuge. He had made enemies, as one who goes shooting up and down our Western streets is prone to do; certain clots and coteries of these made Hays and Abilene their home camps. It was because he feared these foes, and shrunk from the consequences of their feuds, that he called himself an actor, and was shouting and charging and shooting blank cartridges at imitation Indians throughout an æmæmic East. Such childish employment kept Mr. Hickok beyond the talons of his enemies: that was the reason of it; and the reason was the reason of a dog. Thus spake Mr. Hickok's detractors; and none arose to deny, since Mr. Hickok's honor was his honor, and the West does business by the aphorism: "Let every man skin his own eel."

Mr. Hickok had not gone in ignorance of these slanders; he had heard them when as far away from Abilene and Hays as Boston Common. Now, he would refute them; he would give all who desired it an opportunity to burn condemnatory powder in his case. He would pass through Hays and Abilene on his slow way to Cheyenne. These hamlets should be notified. Those who objected to Mr. Hickok's career in any of its incidents might come down to the train and evince their disapproval with their guns. With this fair thought, Mr. Hickok addressed as follows the editors of Abilene and Hays:

"I shall go through at such and such an hour, on such and such a day. I wear my hair as long as ever."

The press is a great and potent engine; and who has public interest more at heart than has your editor? Those of Abilene and Hays posted with all diligence the messages of Mr. Hickok on their bulletin-boards, and then made preparation to tell fullest stories of the homicides.

Mr. Hickok cleaned and oiled his guns, and took the train. He looked forward cheerfully to Hays and Abilene. Experience had taught him that the odds were as fifty are to one that not a warlike soul would interrupt his progress. Humanity talks fifty times where once it shoots, and Mr. Hickok was not ignorant of the race in its verbal ferocities. Indeed, being a philosopher, he explained them.

"A man," observed Mr. Hickok, "nacherally does a heap more shootin' with his mouth than with his gun. An' for two reasons, to wit"—here Mr. Hickok would raise invoking finger—"he's a shorer, quicker shot with his mouth; and it costs less for ammunition. A gent can load and fire his mouth off forty times with a ten-cent drink of licker."

To be sure, some vigorous person, whether at Abilene or Hays, might appear in the path of Mr. Hickok on battle bent. Wherefore, as aforesaid, he loaded his Colt's .45's.

"Because," as Mr. Hickok stated it, "I wouldn't want to be caught four-flushin' if some party called my bluff."

It will seem strange that Mr. Hickok was willing thus to invite hostilities. But there were reasons. The perilous case of his honor has already been set forth. Beyond that Mr. Hickok was indifferent. He proposed no attack; he arranged only for defense, and Mr. Hickok knew just enough of the land he lived in to be aware that his right of defense was perfect under the Constitution. The personal danger he thus courted never once addressed the thoughts of Mr. Hickok.

Mr. Hickok was, like most of those who put in their lives upon the dreary, shadowless, outstretched deserts of the utter West, a fatalist. He would live his days; until his time arrived he was safe from halter, knife and gun. If one had asked Mr. Hickok why was he born he couldn't have told.

LET EVERY MAN FILL HIS HAND

But he would have explained that he didn't care. Mr. Hickok had all unconsciously become a fashion of white Indian, and based existence on a fearlessness that never wavered, added to an indifference that never asked a question. He was what he was; he would be what he would. Men were merest arrows in the air, shot by some sightless archery of nature, one to have a higher and one a lower flight, and each to come clattering back to earth and bury itself in the grave. That was the thought of Mr. Hickok, or rather Mr. Hickok's instinct; for he never shaped it to an idea nor piled it up in words.

It was as Mr. Hickok surmised: there were scores to greet him at Hays and Abilene, but none in hostile guise. While the train paused Mr. Hickok swung down from the platform and stood with his back against the car. There he received his friends and searched the throng for enemies. He was careful, but invincible, and his hair floated bravely as for a challenge.

As the bell rang Mr. Hickok backed smilingly and watchfully aboard. He had no notion of exposing himself to any with military talent enough to manage an attack in flank. But the peace of those visits to former scenes of smoky effort passed unbroken; and Mr. Hickok's honor was repaired. Mr. Hickok was not above a sedate joy concerning his healed honor, for though he might not own a creed he had a pride.

Now that Hays and Abilene had become parcel of the things that were, Mr. Hickok sat himself down to a contemplation of Cheyenne. This would be his earliest visit to that metropolis. Nor had he in days gone made the acquaintance of any who gave Cheyenne as his home. For which reasons Mr. Hickok decided on a modest entrance.

"Which if that's one thing that's always made me tired," observed Mr. Hickok, as he talked the subject over with himself, "it's a strange party jumpin' into camp an' dominicin' 'round as though he owned the yearth an' was thar to let it out on shares."

Mr. Hickok planned an unobtrusive descent upon Cheyenne. He would appear in its midst without announcement. He would uncover his merits one by one and permit Cheyenne to learn his identity only when events should point the day and way. He would claim no privileges beyond the privileges of common men.

Such was the simple plan of Mr. Hickok, and he arrayed himself to be in harmony therewith. The corn-colored mane that had flaunted at Hays and Abilene was made prisoner—as in Kansas City—beneath a small-trimmed, soft felt hat which would kindle rage in no man. Because the whiteness of the sun on the parched pampas hurt his eyes, worn as they were with much scanning of midnight decks, Mr. Hickok donned dark goggles. His coat was black and long—to cover his artillery—and almost clerical. To put a finish on a tout ensemble that spoke of lambs' wool peace, Mr. Hickok, limping with a shade of rheumatism, the harvest of many nights on rain-soaked prairies, carried a cane. This latter implement was a resplendent creature, being the butt end of a rosewood billiard-cue, and as heavy, withal, as a Sioux war-club. Thus did Mr. Hickok appear when he made his Cheyenne debut.

Had any observed him as he went halting up the street he would have been held for one of those evangelists common of the West, present with a purpose to hold services.

Mr. Hickok's Deadwood friend had not arrived. There was word waiting at the Inter-Ocean Hotel that he would not come for a week. Mr. Hickok, at that, decided for recreation.

It was ten of the clock on the first evening, and Mr. Hickok concluded to creep about on his billiard-cue and take a friendly view of Cheyenne. It was well to go abroad with what decent speed he might and acquire a high regard for Cheyenne people; it would be a best, quick method of teaching them to entertain a high regard for him.

"But no trouble!" exclaimed Mr. Hickok with a decisive shake of the head. He was, according to his custom, advising with himself. "No trouble! That's nothin' in it. Besides, the first thing I know I'll get bumped off. The pitcher that goes often to the well gets busted at last." And Mr. Hickok sighed sagaciously. Then, as one who registers a good resolve: "From now on I keep out of every row. The next sport who gets a rise out o' me will have to back me into a corner an' prove conclusively that he's out to skelp me. Then, of course, I'll take my usual measures. That's nothin' in a row; I never won a white chip in one. Besides, that's two ends to a row, same as that's two ends to a faro layout. An' no gent's cummin' enough to see the finish. While he's tryin' to win a bet in the 'pot' he may lose one in the 'big square'; an' thar you be!"

Such were the cogitations of Mr. Hickok when he turned into the Gold Room Saloon.

"What'll you have, Sport?" asked the barkeeper.

"Licker," said Mr. Hickok, leaning on the bar.

The barkeeper tossed up glass and bottle in a manner of scorn. He had called Mr. Hickok "Sport" not for compliment, (Concluded on Page 19)

WHERE THE MONEY CAME FROM

By Arthur E. McFarlane

VANDERBILT THE SECOND

AND BEAMINGLY THINK OUT
BIGGER THINGS

IN THE matter of great wealth descending from the father to the son, we who are really wise know precisely how the story must go. The father earned the millions. He toiled incessantly. He wrung his dollars from the earth or wrested them from the sea. The son merely spends them. His only labor is to keep some track of his ever-gathering riches and to devise new pleasures. In the words of one of those Croesus youths—while his wealth was still prospective: "I used to imagine myself having nothing to do but just touch the bell and say, 'James—ah—bring me up that twenty-three dollars and forty-six cents that's been accumulating since I began this cigar!' Did it turn out that way? Oh, that's a matter into which I would much rather not go."

But the general belief maintains that the father has the harsh, hard time of it and the son the easy. The senior has had to begin the rolling of his snowball of fortune in the bitter frostiness of early morning. From his bare hands alone could come the warmth to hold the snow together. It did not pack itself: he had to pack it. He worked with all nature bleakly and frigidly against him. As for the junior, he continues the work in the warm, mellow glow of afternoon. Raw bare-handedness is no longer necessary; he is working with all nature now.

The analogy, if of a somewhat juvenile complexion, is not altogether a bad one. Suppose we carry it on a little further. Is it not logic that the bulk which the young man must heave along will grow constantly more unwieldy? He can no longer force it straight ahead, and even to turn it now to this side and now to that is back-breaking labor. Yet, if he has that innate sense of duty which will hold any man not an absolute weakling to the task given immediately to his hand, the thing may double in weight, treble, become of killing heaviness, but he will keep on with all the power within him till his night comes on, and, with their dawn, others can take it up. Of the first three generations of Vanderbilts, the Commodore lived to the age of eighty-three, the second to sixty-four and the third to fifty-one. Of the last, who took his portion of labor with the austerity of one given a religious ordination, there is nothing here to be said. Vanderbilt the Second—William H.—was a giant of a man, standing six feet, weighing one hundred and eighty pounds, and capable of holding in the most powerful team of blooded trotters in America. But after two years of responsibility as head of the house he was already giving premonitions of collapse. In five years he was compelled to turn over his work to his sons. By the end of the second winter following he was dead. "It will be harder on my boys, too, than it was on me," he said. And upon the son the prophecy heavily fulfilled itself. William H. Vanderbilt was left more than seventy-five millions by his father; to his children he left two hundred millions. He had been the richest man in the world, and for seven years he had been doing the work of twenty men. What happiness he got from life was in spite of his position.

Now, in the beginning, the Commodore was not a man who dissipated his energies in parental affection; and when it came to spreading that parental affection over thirteen children it had to be spread extremely thin. For those children thirteen was undoubtedly an unlucky number. The old man could rarely remember their right names, but for lack of that he called them other things. Again, if father-nature is commonly partial in its view of the capabilities of its offspring, the Commodore had no such weakness. At a very early date, with admirable candor, he told his eldest son that he thought he was a fool. At the grammar school—to which, it may be remembered, the old gentleman had himself flatly refused to go—the boy, though working steadily, had revealed no amazing aptitude. He was slow, big-jointed, awkward, silent and melancholy. Of the old man's grace of body and mental fire he had none at all. "Oh, you won't never be good for nothing!" the latter would say. And William Henry—as stolid as his name—never made any answer. He stood a great deal of unat; his broad, heavy face, his big, sensitive, potato nose would get very red; his little eyes would blink; yet inside those thick Dutch lips of his, somehow or other, he managed to keep his tongue.

Editor's Note—This is the second of a series of articles by Mr. McFarlane on the origins of the great fortunes of the country.

But at seventeen he picked up his small personal belongings, left that Staten Island house for good and all, and took service as a clerk in the banking house of Drew, Robinson and Company, at three hundred a year. He did good work, too—put something more than ordinary into it—and they added to his salary until it was quite sixteen dollars a week. When they did that, William Henry could very naturally feel that all pecuniary troubles were forever settled, and he did what he had been hungering to do for months—he took unto himself a wife. Miss Mary Kissam, of Brooklyn, was the bride, and she was almost as old as he was.

And they were supremely, rapturously happy. "The money part of it?" That was the simplest thing in the world. It is true the young husband had not savings enough to set up a house; but in East Broadway there were furnished rooms that were quite astonishingly cheap. As for luxuries, what better than a pound of good molasses taffy—a weakness for which stayed with William H., he had shamefacedly to confess, till the year of his death! In short, they didn't ask for much. When two people really care for each other, you know, and if Fate could pardon their being so altogether blissful!

As a matter of fact, Fate did not seem to have noticed the wedding announcements that week. But the old Commodore had. He had never made the boy any allowance, so he could not withdraw the remnants of his favor from him in any palpable way. But, with a belated, day-long broadside of language such as I feel would hardly be admitted into these columns he commended William Henry and his bride to perdition, both mundane and sempiternal.

This was very hard upon the young couple, and they were sobered for almost an afternoon. There was nothing for them to do, however, but to continue to live, and they did so. Indeed, although they had to do some terribly close financing, they found themselves rather happier than ever. Drew, Robinson and Company, also, were more and more convinced that they had some one worth encouraging. Again they increased William Henry's salary, and within another year they were talking of a new partnership.

But before it could be offered him the boy's health broke down. The doctors told him if he wanted to live he would have to leave New York and get out in the country somewhere. He had to answer that he had no money. Then they went to the Commodore: he could choose between helping the boy and letting him die. The old man said that "he'd never be worth a row of pins, anyway." But he bought him a seventy-acre farm on Staten Island—much of it "sour" land, and more of it unimproved—and finally and forever washed his hands of him.

Now, it's very well known to be "easy money" when you've nothing to do but lean back in a swivel chair and study the markets and stock quotations; but if your slickly-groomed young Wall-Streeters had to get out with the plow and harrow they'd find that dollars are harder to yank from the soil than pine-stumps. And they'd maybe learn a lot more for their own good.

Young William Henry did learn a lot for his own good. He sat down and learned the whole scientific theory of fertilizing, under-draining and the chemistry of crop rotation. Then, mistaking his miserable lot for the chance of a lifetime, for a holiday that might last forever, he buckled in to build up his constitution. It was a good life—the only free and natural life. For years he had been a slave and never guessed it. He took to farming right down to the ground and four feet under it. He got out to the fields before the rising of dawn, the rosy-fingered, and stayed out till the blessed dewy eve. He put beef on his bones, and developed a pair of flippers so huge that even the most politic of portrait painters never quite succeeded in concealing them. For month after month he could make the joyous boast that he was doing a bigger day's work than any man under him. He soon had a good many men under him, too, and he added to their number as rapidly as his means would allow him. What New York wanted, and couldn't be given too much of, were small fruits and high-grade vegetables. And by the end of the second summer that barren seventy-acre farm was one big market garden.

But that was just where it was! To William Henry it was only a market garden, and he wanted a real farm, something on which you could lay yourself right out and do a man's work. If he only had another hundred acres, now, he might begin to accomplish something. And there was the old man with all his millions. Of course, it would be simple folly for him to approach him; but a friend might try it. A friend did try, and was refused with sputtering obloquy. Then William Henry regretfully became his own financier. He figured out just how big a mortgage, at the present rate of profit, his seventy acres would carry; in a few days he had $6000 upon them, and had bought more land.

Now, it was one of the Commodore's Napoleonic peculiarities that throughout his life he was surrounded by satellites who kept him fully informed of the doings both of his business associates and his own family. Hence there soon came to him tidings of the boy's little hypothecation. He sought him out, purple of countenance, and then followed one of those hours that seem at some time or other to be inevitable between father and eldest son of all high-stomached dynasties. But this time the son—informed anew that "he'd disgraced himself and everybody connected with him"—washed his hands of his father! Whether or not the story is a true one that he drew up a calculation of exactly how much he had indebted himself to the old man from his birth up, and within just how many months he counted upon settling with him to the last copper penny, it is certainly true that the old gentleman went back to his counting-house in a kind of stupefied haze; and when he recovered therefrom he wrote out young "Billy"—as he always called him—a check for that six thousand. "Pay off that mortgage," he commanded; "and don't never do anything like that again!" In the years immediately following there was at least a cessation of hostilities between them.

AND THEY WERE SUPREMELY, RAPTUROUSLY HAPPY

In the mean time "Billy" was going cheerfully ahead at his man's work. Not that he did nothing but work. The young couple were enjoying life. They both had a good deal of "second-generation culture," and they had already started their picture gallery. For their first picture they paid ninety dollars, "and they hated to let their friends see how extravagant they had been." More than that, the second of the Vanderbilts was beginning to show a fondness for horses "that would not give him the other man's dust." He liked good company, too, and all kinds of it. Especially he delighted in swinging his legs from the Tottenville wharf and listening to the sea tales of the ancient oystermen of that adventurous shore. He did not now do as much manual labor as in his first summers. He preferred to seat himself on a top rail, where his eyes could follow a group of his working hands, and beamingly think out bigger things. His fields were the squares of a chessboard, and he was forever putting himself new problems and new combinations. As for his men, they told him he was getting lazy in his old age. And when he was away at the lunch hour they would turn that top rail of his sharp edge up and bind it so. He would return, climb up and heavily seat himself—to rise again with sorrow about the mouth and a twinkle in the eyes, and seek another rail farther down. It was a joke that master and man seemed to get more fun out of every time it was repeated. At a recent date some of those "knife-edgers" could still be pointed out.

However, as William H. was thus being moved along his fences he had new vistas of the neighboring fields. He did not covet them—he had no hankering for possessions—but, as he often said in later life, "he did like to see a thing taken hold of and managed properly." He bought a meadow here, a bit of upland there, and he put every acre of it as scrupulously under cultivation as if it had been land won and dyked in from the Zuyder Zee. It was only a few years until he was making a clear income of some fifteen or sixteen thousand dollars—which is the interest upon half a million. Yet he was not thinking of his gains in any such manner. To him money was of the same order of things as the seed he planted—much less to be looked to, indeed, for all money was of equal value and all seed most decidedly was not.

No doubt, too, that quality of being able to increase his substance, that necessity of ever widening his activities, descended to him as inherently as the literary ability of Dumas père came down to Dumas fils, or the statesmanship of Pitt the elder lifted itself again in Pitt the younger. And, if his ability to take his wealth from the virgin soil be the test of whether a millionaire can in any sense be said to create that wealth, I think in those years that test was made. With every autumn William H. Vanderbilt added to his land an acreage almost equal to his original holding. From seventy it became one hundred and forty, two hundred, three hundred and fifty. It seems only logical to believe that, had not the inrush of circumstances turned him off into other things, he would before his death have owned most of the farming land in Staten Island and thousands of acres in New Jersey and Long Island as well. Out West he would probably have become the biggest rancher in the world, and in any case no less a multi-millionaire.

What turned him into another path was this: The tiny thirteen-mile Staten Island Railroad was in the worst of messes. From being useless to itself and to the farmers whose business was largely dependent upon it, it had gone into insolvency. Its stock was largely held by the Commodore and the neighbors of his son. The latter had shown himself the most efficient and made himself the most important man on the island; and now those neighboring stockholders—the Commodore skeptically concurring—asked William H. to act as receiver for the little road. It was plainly something that ought to be managed properly, and manage it properly he did.

As a feeder to its Stapleton terminus he established an independent ferry line from New York. He lowered its freight rates, tuned up its schedules, and made it most popular with excursionists by getting up fishing and picnic parties on the South Shore. In a year it was paying; in another year it was quite out of bankruptcy.

And that was a piece of managing which appealed to the old man. He made "Billy" president of the toy-shop road, watched him narrowly for three or four years more, and then told him he had something for him that would "try him out hard." He made him vice president—that is, chief executive officer—of the Harlem Railroad. William H. had no desire to leave his farm. He was forty-three years old, his habits of life had formed and he was very happy. But, like every good man who has to choose between big work and ease of life, he did not make it a matter of choice.

"NO DOUBT YOU CAN AFFORD IT"

And with him the fourteen years following were like another apprenticeship. To the view of the world outside he was completely blanketed by his father, his will in all things wholly subordinate. The way in which he worked, too, seemed to bear that out. In a strange reversal of the customary, he was the plodder, the tortoise, while the old man, though in no wise harebrained, relied upon his bursts of genius and leaps of intuition. To picture it in a military figure, while the father put on his harness and fire-eatingly rode down into battle with the hosts of Drew, Fisk and Gould, the son, already more prime minister than crown prince, stayed quietly in the Grand Central cabinet chamber and administered that railroad kingdom. He doubled the tracks of the Harlem, thereby doubling its traffic. The old man made him vice-president of the Hudson River Railroad, and when, in 1869, it was consolidated with the New York Central he made him executive officer of both. William H. doubled their united seven hundred miles of track—and that paid threefold.

When he had no adviser but himself the Commodore had refused to think of going beyond the limits of New York State. "If you go west of Buffalo," he said, intending ridicule, not prophecy, "you'll go to San Francisco, and then to China!" Yet the steady logic of the young man's mind had become an absolute compulsion. In 1873 the Vanderbilts had reached Chicago by the absorption of the Lake Shore. Again William H. was "tried out." He was made president of the new road; and it, too, he made to pay amazingly! . . . In the old man's nature was that queer outcropping of superstition which goes so often with the genius of action; in his later years he used to consult spirit mediums as the early Romans went to the augurs. Now he began to believe that "Billy" had a discernment of things which was more than natural. He used to look at him at times as if he had the golden touch. And when, in 1877, he departed this life, as every one had expected, he left to him—with a doubled burden of labor—seven-eighths of his fortune; some said it was ninety millions; it was at least seventy-five.

At once, in three different ways, it was again put to the son to prove himself. The will of the old man dead gave promise of giving more trouble, even, than had his will when living. One of his sons he cut off with the interest on $200,000. His daughters (he never had any use for women at the best) he left with a paltry million or so. From their husbands there was a frightful outburst. William H. waited long enough for their blood to cool. Then, on Christmas Eve, he drove from house to house, delivering at each a small valise. And each of those valises contained a small holiday gift of $500,000 in securities. One of his brothers in law, obviously a better business man than William H., took occasion to point out that, as the market had happened to close, those particular securities were really worth only $499,850. Vanderbilt wrote him out a check for the odd $150, and when he got outside chuckled immoderately over the incident. As may be seen before the end of this study, he was not built on a picayune plan.

Again, into the man's well-known hatred of all conflict many had read timidity. And before he had been in control for a year there was opened the West Shore, a road built to halve the profits of the New York Central. Whether or no you believe that a throat-cutting competition should be allowed by law, Vanderbilt, as head of the endangered corporation, saw only one course open to him. He laid out a campaign of rate reductions which made it a test of which road could lose the most blood and still survive. It was financial death for the West Shore, but it left the old road deathly weak itself.

Thirdly, it was said that the second Vanderbilt had made himself a mere encyclopedia of railroad knowledge; when it came to dealing with men he would learn his deficiencies. Now, that was 1877, the great strike year. And between hard times and the late rate war the wages of the New York Central employees had to be reduced ten per cent. The blood and anarchy taking frenzied way in Chicago threatened to be duplicated in New York. It was said that the Grand Central Depot was chalked for the torch. Vanderbilt the Second founded his belief in his fellowmen upon frankness. He wrote to those angry employees the openest statement of the road's financial position, declared that the reduction must stand, but gave his word that at the earliest warrantable moment the old schedule—and, following it, a better one—should come into force. There was no strike. He showed how he took that mark of confidence by sending the men a gift of $100,000. And, long before they looked for it, their wages went up again. It was the only difficulty of that kind he ever had. He had treble proved himself—and once more he went back to his work. He seems always to have known that he had not the genius of his father. He had to get his results by deliberation and logic alone. And from the time when he took charge of the little Staten Island line he had been making the most logical study of the whole matter of railroad transportation. He had learned the good points of fifty different styles of locomotives. He knew track-laying, station-building, freight-handling. He had scrutinized semaphores and due-bills alike. He had personally gone into the minutiae of branch-office bookkeeping and the disposal of cast-off ties. It was not without reason that he was thought of as an encyclopedia. He had fitted himself with all railroad information to be had anywhere on earth. And now, almost suddenly, he found himself able to deal with the subject as with an exact science. For that reason he was probably the greatest railroad man who ever lived.

The Commodore despised all things foreign. William H. brought in a thousand ideas from Europe. His scheme of executive control in minor affairs was largely transplanted from France and Germany. The system of administrative responsibility that he left behind him had been adapted from England. The old man, who had grown up in the days of stage-coaching, firmly believed that the mutual security of the carrier and the carried called for a general transfer at the end of every hundred miles or more. William H. saw that a transference of responsibility was essential, but that the repeated transfer of passengers and freight was an abomination and a loss to all concerned. He had grasped the potentialities of through trains and connected traffic belts. And his brain was ready with that divisional system which alone has made great railroads possible. It was as if he had given a two-thousand-mile canal a system of locks which did away with all delays by the opening and closing of gates.

The Commodore despised the engineering mind. William H. recognized that it was the most potent force in the modern world. The father had an intellect that took whirling streams and yawning cañons at a bound. The son had the type of brain that sits down, gathers its materials with slow thinking thoroughness and does pier and caisson work; nor was there any flood of opposition or chasm of difficulty he did not bridge with as unmovable a permanence as is within our human

(Continued on Page 22)

The Singular Miss Smith

By Florence Morse Kingsley

CHAPTER III

IMMEDIATELY succeeding events appeared to Mrs. Nugent in the light of a just sequence.

"I am not surprised to find that you wish to go away for a while, my dear," she said plaintively to her niece. "Indeed, I should think you could hardly endure it to see that poor, dear man, so pale and disappointed in his surprise, yet bearing up so nobly. You have dealt him a blow in his tenderest sensibilities, Anne, and one that he will never recover from. If you could find it in your heart to reconsider the matter even now, my love, I am quite sure I could—"

"Please don't speak of it, aunt," said Anne decidedly. "I cannot say just how long I shall be away," she added with a curious embarrassment of manner, which entirely escaped Mrs. Nugent's short-sighted eyes. "I hope you will be quite comfortable while I am gone."

"And you are looking far handsomer than I ever saw you, my dear," that lady went on with a fretful sigh. "I wish you would reflect on the fact that you are quite twenty-seven."

Anne laughed softly. "Please remember what I told you about Lizzie and the other maids," she said. "I have thought far too little about them and their comfort of late."

"What nonsense, child! Our maids are so spoiled that they never stay in a place after leaving us, and you know that quite well. What with having their own sitting room and dining room, and heat in their bedrooms and porcelain tubs for bathing, and two afternoons a week, I sometimes wonder what you will think of next."

Anne smiled. "I think I shall find some other things to do for them—soon," she said. "I intend to. And aunt"—the girl hesitated, while a slight flush overspread her face and neck—"I don't know that I have spoken to you of a—a girl named Annie Smith. She is a perfectly honest, respectable person, though not an experienced cook, and I have promised to help her. She wishes to go out to service, and—"

"The very thing," observed Mrs. Nugent placidly. "The under kitchen-maid is leaving at the end of her month. The girl is bent on marrying the butcher's boy. I sent for her to come to my room and told her what I thought of her folly. I presume she will be looking for plain washing before long, with half a dozen babies clinging to her skirts. Persons in that rank of life should not be allowed to marry."

"Did you tell poor Mary all that, Aunt Nugent?"

"Certainly I did. And it is quite true, too. The silly little thing cried and said she loved Henry—it seems the butcher's boy is named Henry. I reproved her severely and she grew quite impertinent. Such persons cannot understand the delicate sentiment of love, my dear. However, I have washed my hands of the girl. She is to leave, as I said, at the end of the month, so you may have your protégée call at the housekeeper's room."

"I am sure Annie Smith could not fill Mary's place," said Miss Smith reflectively. "And I don't wish her to work where so many servants are kept. What you will please to do, aunt, is simply to forward to any person who may inquire about the girl during my absence one of the letters of recommendation which you will find in my desk. Will you be so kind as to remember?"

"Certainly, my dear, since you ask it. If the girl calls here I will see her myself. I think she might do very well under Bridget—if, as you say, she is respectable and honest."

Miss Smith did not pursue the conversation further, and half an hour later she was driving to the railway station. The subsequent movements of this young woman were so singular that one must look for an explanation of them in a certain unpretentious volume labeled Note Book, which formed a part of her modest luggage. The notebook in question bore on its front page, in Anne Smith's small, distinct handwriting, the words, Notes on Ontology. These "notes" begin abruptly as follows:

I find that the women in the Ontological Club talk a vast deal about planes. As nearly as I can find out, planes are very much like the shelves in a china-closet, and one cannot very well peek over the edge of one shelf to look at the objects on the shelves above or below. Even if one succeeds in peeking there isn't much use in doing it because one cannot possibly understand what is happening on any shelf but one's own. At least that is what one woman said. Some of the others seem to be able to stand off and see all the shelves at once. They are what they call "unfolded," and very likely will never have to come back to the china-closet again—even to the top shelf of it. It gives one an odd feeling to think one may have been an East Indian or a Chinaman a few years back? I wonder what I was? And I wonder still more what I shall have to be next time.

I have been trying to realize that I have a solar plexus. If one can "concentrate" and become really conscious of having a solar plexus one will not care a rap what happens next, or rather, one can make things happen just as one likes. It seems to me that this would be like owning an Aladdin's lamp. My opinion is probably due to the fact that I am not at all "unfolded." We all sat silent for half an hour in the club this afternoon, with a fat, calm Hindu man, who looked something like an idol, on the platform. We were trying to "concentrate" the way he did. After a while I found myself staring hard at the back hair of the woman directly in front of me. I had somehow discovered that she wears two switches. I wonder what father would think of all this?

I wish I knew whether any of these remarkable things we are hearing at the club are true or not. They are certainly interesting to a degree, but for my part I don't see how any of it is going to help me very much—to say nothing of the world at large. In fact the most of it is being unearthed from antiquity for our latter-day benefit—or undoing. Really I don't know which. The woman who lectured on reincarnation to-day said that she knew for a fact that St. Paul and Napoleon Bonaparte were one and the same person. It struck me as being a very singular idea. There is a tall, stout woman in the club, named Mrs. Van Deuser, who is always talking fussily about "our eonian trends" and "our ethereal environments" and "our spiritual individualities." She is supposed to be very much "unfolded," but I heard the other day that she beat down her sewing woman shamefully on the price of some elaborate embroidery work. The woman told me about it herself. I saw that she had been crying when she brought me some work, and I asked her to tell me why, with the above result. Quite evidently Mrs. Van D. has not yet unfolded as to her purse.

We have had a sociological session at the club. I confess that I haven't attended the meetings for a long while. They have been having a course of lessons on Astrology by a greasy-looking old man who lectures in a red cloak trimmed with ermine and covered with embroidered constellations, dragons and things. He says he is a reincarnation of one of the three wise men. Mrs. Van Deuser called yesterday to tell me of the sociological meeting. She says I have missed a precious opportunity because I did not hear Professor Zewilowyk—if that is the way to spell his name. I dare say I have missed a number of them. I am really interested in "the servant problem," so I promised to be present. The discussion has proved a great disappointment, but I have an idea, nevertheless. Why am not I an American laboring woman?

The Rev. Frederick Gallatin has asked me to marry him. Aunt Nugent begs me with tears to accept him. The dear woman has discovered the appalling fact that I am rapidly drifting into old maidenhood. She urges me to realize that I am quite twenty-seven. In view of this undeniable fact I have decided to fall back on the idea that my soul mate is not incarnate in this particular lifetime of mine. One does not mind being an old maid under such circumstances; in fact it is distinctly interesting and romantic.

I have made up my mind to see just what sort of a person I am apart from my present environment, which doesn't seem to fit. I have a real desire to work with my hands, to be tired—yes, even to be dirty, for the pleasure of making all clean again. So I am going to work in somebody's kitchen. I am not going to do this because I am especially interested in "the masses." Really I am not interested in them at all. I am interested in myself. If I can find out what I am good for it will be time then to take up other people's problems. I have been writing my own references, and I hope I have told the truth about myself. How can one answer for the honesty of a person who has never had the slightest temptation to be otherwise? If Anne Smith was hungry—really hungry—and a bun belonging to somebody else lay conveniently unguarded, would she eat it? I confess that I do not know.

I shall be glad to get away from Aunt Nugent. She sighs windily every time she looks at me; she is thinking—I know this telepathically—that I have thrown away my own golden chance of matrimony. She would have so liked to refer to "my niece, Mrs. Dr. Gallatin, a very philanthropic and influential woman, my dear."

My fingers are so cold I can hardly write, though I am wrapped in a smelly patchwork quilt taken from the unpleasant-looking bed in which I am to sleep to-night. Nevertheless, I am cheerful, even jubilant. I have got a place! It was all absurdly easy. I said good-by to Winston at the door of the station. The poor old fellow looked really sorry. "It'll be lonesome without you, miss," he said; then apologized for mentioning his feelings. Well-trained servants are not supposed to have discernible emotions of any sort. After dismissing the carriage I walked through to the baggage-room and arranged to store one of my trunks "till called for." The other I had sent to this boarding-house, a respectable place, where one may dine, sleep and breakfast for fifty cents.

I left home in a cheap ready-made suit that I bought last week at a bargain sale for $9.38. I don't think Aunt Nugent noticed it; but Lizzie did, and looked scandalized.

"Shan't I bring you your brown broadcloth, Miss Anne, 'stead of that?" she said with an emphasis which made me smile.

"Why, no, Lizzie," I said; "I think this dress quite nice enough. I like it very much; don't you?"

"Perhaps you didn't notice that the skirt is lined with percaline, miss," said Lizzie sternly, "and I am sure the jacket doesn't fit no more'n anything."

"One can't expect everything in a ready-made suit," I said coolly, as I put it on. "It was a bargain besides; it cost $9.38."

I saw a light come into her eyes. "Where—" she began, then bit the words off short with a blush. Lizzie blushes beautifully. She has the real English complexion of milk and roses.

"I beg your pardon, miss," she added stiffly. "I hope as how I knows my place."

"I'M VERY PARTICULAR ABOUT MY WORK," OBSERVED MRS. JONES WITH RISING SEVERITY OF MANNER

MY FINGERS ARE SO COLD I CAN HARDLY WRITE

If Lizzie and I were condemned to a prolonged sojourn on a desert island I have no doubt we should shortly find many things in common. As it is, the brotherhood of man is something of a myth as far as mistress and maid are concerned.

"I'm sure I hope I shall know my place as well," I answered honestly. Lizzie looked mystified and a trifle uneasy. She undoubtedly suspected me of sarcasm.

The first move I made, after getting rid of Anne Smith, was to secure a room for the night. At first I thought I could not do this, as the landlady seemed rather suspicious of my resources.

She stared hard at me and harder still at my trunk, a small shabby one, which the cabman had dumped beside me on the steps after bidding me to "look lively" for my fare. "Ain't you any friends in the city?" she demanded, fixing her ferret eyes on my hat, a plain Alpine, chastely swathed in a brown veil, and from thence descending by slow degrees to the toe of my well-worn boot. "I don't never like to take in one-night roomers—leastways ladies."

"Why not?" I asked anxiously. "I'm afraid it is too late to look for a place to-night."

Her sour face cleared somewhat. "What kind of a place was you lookin' for?" she inquired.

"I'm a bit uncertain," I began in my usual tone, then catching her hard, black eye, as it strove to penetrate between the buttons of my ill-fitting jacket to the secrets of my guilty heart, I added with a bold toss of the head, "Ain't you awful curious, ma'am? But I don't mind tellin' you that I am a-goin' out to service if I gets a place that suits. If you don't want to keep me overnight, though, I guess I can find a place around the corner."

"You c'n come in," said the woman, opening the door. I paid her on the spot for a night's lodging. After this transaction she grew quite communicative and accommodating to the point of giving me the address of an intelligence office only three blocks away.

"You c'n say 'at you're stoppin' at Mis' Buckleses," she said kindly. "The woman 'at keeps the office is a p'ticlar frien' o' mine."

The office in question was a dingy room three flights of dirty stairs from the street, up which I toiled in the wake of a couple of giggling colored girls. My heart sank within me as I entered, still following the lead of the negresses, one of whom advanced to the desk in the corner with the peculiar swaying, sidelong gait of her race. "Please, Miss Lehn, Julia an' me couldn't git 'long nohow to that place you sent us las' week. We'se left."

The stout, showily-dressed woman who sat behind the desk turned over a leaf of the book that lay before her. "You're a couple of worthless baggages," she said without show of emotion.

"No, we ain't, Miss Lehn," retorted the girl; "we's awful smart and likely, we is, but we ain't a-goin' to be put upon like we was no 'count niggahs. You give us 'nother place, an' you'll see. We don't want no mo' 'an fo' in the fambly."

The woman's cold eyes had already seized upon me as I lurked in the background, uneasily debating the question as to whether I would better not, after all, reconsider my sociological aspirations.

"You c'n pay your money and call to-morrow at ten," she said shortly, still addressing herself to the first comers, while her eyes and a slight motion of her elaborately-frizzled head commanded me to approach.

"But dey ain' done pay us yit, Mis' Lehn," whined the colored girl. "Dey's awful mean folks to wuk fo', dey suahly is. You kin cha'ge it up to us. We'll pay fust thing next week."

"You're lying," said the woman. "Go 'long. Was you lookin' for help, ma'am?" she added in a high-pitched, conciliatory tone, as she addressed me.

"No," I almost whispered; "I—I want a place." I was painfully conscious of three pairs of staring eyes set hard on my crimsoning face. One of the negresses giggled. "My lawdy! An' I was mos' thinkin' she was a lady fo' suah!" she whispered loudly.

I bethought myself in time to bestow a glance of scorn on the two. "I ain't very experienced," I added loftily. "I've been livin' to home an' ain't had to work till now. I'm stoppin' to Mis' Buckleses. She told me to mention her name, ma'am."

"Have you any reference?" demanded the cold, official voice of the frizzled one.

I produced the reference of Miss Anne Smith, of Beacon Street. The woman read it slowly, scanning the quality of the paper and envelope. "Inexperienced, but clean an' honest," she repeated thoughtfully. "Well, you look clean enough, an' I presume you're as honest as most. Your name an' address, an' two dollars, please."

"I'll have to get a place right away," I said as I laid the bills on the desk. I had not expected to pay this fee and I was actually frightened as I looked into my purse.

"Well, I c'd sen' you out to-morrow if you'll take a general housework place—in the country. There's a woman in Bentley Manor that's changed six times a'ready since September. She's out of a girl again, an' wants one in a hurry. She pays twelve a month an' helps some with the cookin'!"

"I'll go," I said.

IV

MRS. ALGERNON DE PUYSTER-JONES was in process of entertaining a visitor in the parlor of her house in Bentley Manor. The visitor—the clergyman's wife making parochial calls—had stood patiently for five long minutes on the doorstep of the De Puyster-Jones residence, distant sounds of hurriedly banged doors and scuttling footsteps assuring her experienced ear that the hell had sounded within and preparations to receive her were on foot.

"I've a good mind to leave my card and go right along," the good lady told herself at last. "I want to make six more calls before suppertime." Just then the door flew open and Mrs. Jones herself—she was Mrs. de Puyster-Jones on her visiting-cards only—flushed and somewhat disheveled as to her general appearance, invited the visitor to enter.

"NO," I ALMOST WHISPERED; "I—I WANT A PLACE"

"I'm sure I don't know what you'll think of me, Mrs. Bostwick," exclaimed Mrs. Jones, as the two seated themselves in the parlor. "But I've been having the most dreadful time with servants lately. I tell Algy we'll have to break up and go to boarding if I can't get somebody before long." Mrs. Jones was a large, somewhat limp young woman, with an uncertain complexion and a quantity of reddish hair which was tumbled untidily behind her ears.

The visitor murmured sympathy and acquiescence, her shrewd eyes taking in the dusty and forlorn condition of the densely-furnished little room.

"I've had six since September," pursued Mrs. Jones with rising earnestness, "and each was more dreadful than the last. For a week I haven't had anybody. I declare I've been almost crazy; what with getting Mr. Jones off to the city on the half-past seven car, and the children to school at a quarter to nine, I hardly know what I'm about. I'm awfully nervous, Mrs. Bostwick. I don't know as I've told you that I've been on the verge of nervous prostration twice in the last year. Yes, indeed, I have; I'm taking medicine all the time now. And if you have nerves you know what that means. Some people seem born without nerves, don't they? There's Mrs. Stone across the street; that woman is a perfect marvel to me! She does all her own work and every bit of her plain sewing besides. That woman hasn't a nerve in her body, not one. But I tell Algy I'm not made that way. If you could see my kitchen, Mrs. Bostwick. It's just the way that dreadful Mary left it. The most impudent creature! I haven't had the strength to do more than to get the meals and wash the dishes since she went. I've been lying down all the afternoon trying to get up strength to get Mr. Jones' dinner."

Mrs. Bostwick here stemmed the tide of information civilly to regret the interrupted nap.

"No, indeed, don't say a word. I'm awfully glad you called. I was just getting dressed when you rang. I simply have to lie down, you know. I am so nervously organized. But I'm expecting a girl this afternoon. I don't suppose she'll be any good, but then I've simply got to have somebody. I told Algy to tell those tiresome intelligence-office people that they must send me a girl or take my name off their books. You have to be firm with such people. They're always ready to impose on you—don't you find them so? I declare I believe that creature is coming here. Do look, Mrs. Bostwick; you don't suppose that can be my girl, do you? Why, she is really quite a nice-looking person. Well, I'm sure I deserve a treasure if anybody ever did. Yes, she is coming around back and she has a bundle. Well, I am relieved! It did seem as though it would kill me to get dinner. I always did late cooking, or housework of any kind. Don't be in a hurry, Mrs. Bostwick. I'll just let her in, if you'll excuse me, and—"

But Mrs. Bostwick, with a frugally calculating eye for the fleeting minutes, had risen with a relieved sigh. The subsequent monologue carried quite to the verge of the front doorsteps, in the course of which Mrs. de Puyster-Jones treated her visitor to a detailed description of Algy's late attack of lumbago and Ethel's sudden seizure with the grippe, touching lightly on the peccadillos of the grocer and closing with a spirited dissertation on the shamefully short weight of the last ton of coal delivered at the De Puyster-Jones residence, which Mr. Jones had taken the pains to weigh by scuttlefuls—indeed he had—consumed so much time that Annie Smith standing before the back door was given ample time for observation and reflection.

That young person, neatly attired in her bargain suit, already somewhat drabbed about the feet, actually laughed aloud as she surveyed the latticed inclosure in which she stood. It is likely that few other persons in the town of Bentley Manor would have seen anything humorous in the collection of objects at which she gazed. The ash barrel, its legitimate contents topped with a miscellaneous collection of tin cans and waste paper, guarded a platoon of rusty and disabled kitchen utensils brimming over with malodorous refuse. In the background lurked a dark-complexioned mop, three spavined brooms and a tin pail oozing kerosene oil. A fine wet snow was sifting itself impartially over the scene.

Repeated knockings of a respectful degree of loudness failing to elicit any response from the mud-spattered door, Miss Smith resorted to the handle of her umbrella. The door flew wide at this and the girl was confronted by her new mistress.

"Are you the girl from Lehn's?" inquired the lady without preamble. "Yes, ma'am." "You can come right in. I guess I better have a little talk with you before you go upstairs to change your dress."

"Yes, ma'am." "I'm very particular about my work," observed Mrs. Jones with rising severity of manner. "You may not think so to look at this kitchen"—the girl's bright eyes were roving over the place with evident dismay—"but I've had a dreadful creature here—an Irish girl. I do hope you're German."

"No, ma'am; I'm an American." "Dear, dear! I was hoping you might be German, or a Swede. Americans do have such ideas! Are you a good cook?"

The girl hesitated. "I can make good coffee," she said slowly. "Yes, and a Welsh rabbit, and I suppose I could

(Continued on Page 20)

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

FOUNDED A. D. 1728
PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY BY
THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY
421 TO 427 ARCH STREET PHILADELPHIA
GEORGE HORACE LORIMER, EDITOR

Subscription Two Dollars the Year
Five Cents the Copy of All Newsdealers

The Net Paid Circulation of The Saturday Evening Post of February 27 was 694,100 Copies

Poor Richard Junior's Philosophy

It is disheartening to call a bluff that is not a bluff.

A woman's idea of economy often gets no farther than hash for breakfast.

It has been the fashion to jeer at the man who knows enough to get in out of the wet ever since the days of Noah.

Dies Irae

GERMAN thinkers and writers are said to be "appalled" by the output of books there—just as are our thinkers and writers by the same phenomenon here. In fact, everywhere in this modern world the "literary class" is deeply pained by its threatened "vulgarization."

There was a time when to be able to read and write gave one caste. This was succeeded by the time when to have written a book was self-evident proof of one's superiority. Now it begins to look as if the time were at hand when letters would be able to hold out a reward of distinction only to him who wrote a good book.

Is it surprising that the foreboding shadow of that dread day appals some writers?

The Doctor's Bill

THERE are 200,000 doctors in the United States, collecting in fees each year more than $150,000,000. Then there are the prescription bills and the huge expenditures for patent medicines. Clearly, sickness is one of the main events in the routine of the average American's life.

Among no other people is intelligence so widely diffused as among us. Among no other people are the means to comfortable and attractive life so widespread. And those medical facts show that we are in no haste, so far as desire goes, to adventure the life beyond. Yet those colossal expenditures for drugs, those doctors so numerous that there is one for every 400 people, are proofs of our national ignorance of the laws of health, our national indifference to the comparatively easy precautions against sickness.

There are cases of unavoidable illness. But a wise man is slow to assume that his is one of them.

The Tax on Ugliness

A PROMINENT citizen of Greater New York has given it as his opinion that the utter lack of regard for convenience and beauty manifested in the planning and construction of the Brooklyn terminal of the East River Bridge has cost the municipality of Brooklyn fifty millions of dollars in loss of real-estate values. The estimate may be exaggerated, but there is at least enough truth in it to set people thinking. The popular view of the planning of public works has been that it is all very well to pay some attention to the requirements of beauty when there is plenty of money on hand for the purpose, but that at the best beauty is a luxury that is a heavy drain on the taxpayer. If Mr. Edward

M. Shepard is right the truth is just the other way around. It is ugliness, and not beauty, that costs money, and for which the taxpayer, directly or indirectly, is obliged to pay enormously.

A little reasoning ought to convince one of the wisdom of Mr. Shepard's assertion. The city or town or village where public improvements are planned and carried out with regard to some other considerations than those of bare utilitarianism never lacks for means to make such improvements. As improvements are made, property increases in value, and owners and the community at large are mutually benefited. There is no more practical illustration of the scriptural declaration that to him that hath shall be given, and that from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath.

One of the things that the people of our large cities need to have impressed upon them is that beauty is an asset and that ugliness is a liability, and that the movement in behalf of municipal improvement that is making such noteworthy headway in various parts of the country has back of it something more than an aesthetic impulse. It is based on a recognition of the fact that the people are entitled to beautiful and wholesome surroundings as a right and not as a privilege, and that no more beneficent investment of public resources can be made than to build a city where beauty shall be the common heritage of all who dwell therein.

A New Deal in Europe

A FRENCH statesman remarked at the beginning of this war that it might lead to new and startling groupings of the Powers. It may, indeed. For instance, consider the effect of a complete Russian defeat at sea upon the Franco-Russian alliance.

When that league was formed one of its chief objects in the minds of both parties to it was the creation of a naval power superior to the Triple Alliance on the one hand, and able to make head against England on the other. This object seemed to be attained. The fleets of France and Russia were much stronger than those of Germany, Austria and Italy, and they appeared on paper a fair match for the navy of England.

But the practical elimination of Russia as a naval power would completely transform the situation. The German navy alone will soon be equal to that of France, so that the French fleet plus the debris of the Russian squadrons would be no match for the forces of the Triple Alliance. Still less would it be able to challenge British supremacy at sea. Thus the Franco-Russian alliance would lose a great part of its reason for existence. There could hardly be a better illustration of the futility of prophecy. Among all the statesmen who built up the two rival European leagues, and who anxiously canvassed all the possibilities that might affect the position of either of them, there was probably not one who took account of the contingency of a naval defeat of Russia by Japan.

If the Franco-Russian alliance is to continue it will need to be strengthened in some way at sea. There is one possible recourse in that direction which no doubt is having earnest consideration at Paris and St. Petersburg. If Italy could be won over from the Triple Alliance the impaired position of France and Russia would be restored. Italy's present associations are unnatural. She would like to get Trent, Trieste and Dalmatia away from her ally, Austria, and her interests clash with those of Austria in Albania. France and Russia could offer to satisfy her there and also in Tripoli. As an inducement to break her present relations with England they could promise her the reversion of Malta.

Italy holds the key of the European situation. She is in a position to make the rival Powers of the Continent bid high for her friendship.

The Measure of a Man

IT IS somewhat strange that so much time and energy should be spent in inquiring about and discussing the intelligence of the lower animals when so little is known about the intelligence of man.

Have you ever looked back over your actions for a single day, and tried to decide which and how many of them were intelligent, which and how many instructive or blindly imitative or wholly accidental? Have you ever tried to find out just how much actual, independent thinking you were capable of, just how far you were dependent upon your books, your newspaper or your acquaintances for your ideas and opinions?

Yet this thinking capacity is the measure of a man. At imitation, at instinctive performance many of the lower animals surpass us.

A Man Diligent in Business

A YOUNG man, appointed to a position of importance and possibility, fixed his office hours at from ten to five—with an hour for luncheon—and set apart the rest of the day to relaxation. It was not until the end of his third month that his employer began to look about for his successor—but that was because his employer happened to be his personal friend.

"He wanted me to kill myself in his service," was the young man's explanation to his friends when he "resigned." And a great many of his friends are sympathizing with him in his hard luck.

There is a widespread theory that a man should confine his business to the office. Happily, the conditions of life are making this theory more and more difficult to act upon. And it may presently come to pass that a man will have to spend all his waking hours in thinking, directly or indirectly, of the matter that is the most important to him and should be the most fascinatingly interesting. That will not be a great day for the lazy and the long-eared.

Friend and Foe

BEYOND question, England is our friend. Beyond question, in the troubled state of affairs in the East England longs to feel that Mr. Roosevelt and Secretary Hay are ready to back her up. Beyond question, we ought to back up England or any other nation in any honorable, straightforward, peaceful effort to keep the angry nations from making stupid brutes of themselves by engaging in war.

But—we are friends with England only as England is part of mankind. We are under no obligations whatever to England. It is not by permission from her that we inhabit these shores and speak an improved form of the English language. We do not especially care whether she or Japan or Russia or France or Germany gets in the Orient what each covets of other people's property.

We can take care of ourselves. We could take care of our friendly little cousin, too, if we chose. But we don't choose. We have other and better uses for our blood and treasure.

Let England burn her own paws in pulling her own chestnuts out of the fire. We will make treaties with the victor and exchange the goods of peace with him—and with the vanquished, too.

Why We Pay Taxes

THIS definition of taxation is from Montesquieu:

"Each citizen contributes to the revenues of the State a portion of his property in order that his tenure of the real may be secure."

We are wandering farther and farther from this ideal of taxation. Yet does it not remain the wise and the safe ideal? When a body of men can get together at Washington or at a State capital and vote away your money for any other purpose whatsoever, is it not the beginning of corruption, the beginning of a progressive confiscation that must ultimately impair all property rights?

Security is the sole object of a democratic state. Provision for other purposes requires more wisdom than is likely to assemble in a modern legislative hall.

The Home of the Microbes

IF ST. PAUL could have foreseen the time when 96,000,000 microbes would be found on a single greenback he would have been more than ever convinced that the love of money is the root of all evil. The health authorities throughout the country are becoming aroused to the dangers of disease-carrying currency, and Health Commissioner Darlington, of New York, proposes that every piece of money in circulation shall be frequently disinfected. At the same time Congress is asked to pass an act compelling the Government to destroy all the bills it takes in and pay out none but new ones.

Of course, nothing ought to be allowed to stand in the way of health, but it is worth while to remember that, under this arrangement, bills of small denominations would be an extremely expensive luxury for our Uncle Samuel. It costs the Government a little over a cent and two-thirds to print, issue and redeem a note, regardless of its size. That is over one and two-thirds per cent. of the value of a dollar bill. If the notes were purely fiat—issued with nothing but the public credit behind them—the Government would, in effect, be borrowing at three and one-third per cent. if they were redeemed twice a year, six and two-thirds per cent. if they were redeemed quarterly, and twenty per cent. if they were renewed monthly. But, in addition, it loses the interest on a huge gold reserve and an enormous mass of silver bullion, most of the small bills being silver certificates.

The cost of printing and handling is insignificant in proportion to the value of large bills, but it is very heavy in proportion to that of small ones. The Bank of England, which never pays out an old note, issues no notes for less than twenty-five dollars. In the number of pieces our bills above that figure are not worth counting.

What we really need is a handy coin to take the place of the one-dollar and two-dollar bills. The silver dollar is too clumsy.

If somebody will show us how to make a dollar of about the size and weight of a quarter, durable, distinctive in appearance and not easily counterfeited, we can retire all our small paper currency, and several trillion microbes will be out of a job.

A LITTLE UNION SCOUT

By Joel Chandler Harris

XII

WE RODE along without adventure of any kind, though I momentarily expected to hear the tramp of Forrest's outriders behind us. They never came, and about ten o'clock—my stomach was my clock in this instance, for I had had no breakfast—we suddenly turned off from the main road and plunged into the shadows of the finest wood I had ever seen. There were giant chestnuts, giant poplars, giant oaks and giant pines. They were so large that human beings seemed small and insignificant beside them, and I realized that we were in the primeval forest.

The thought, however, did not satisfy my hunger, and I wondered when and where a halt was to be called and rations parceled out. It is a vexatious feeling for the young to have the pangs of hunger, and I was not used to a long fast. My feelings were relieved by Whistling Jim, who informed me that he had placed a very substantial ration in my holsters; and I am free to say that, after Colonel Ryder, the negro was the most thoughtful and considerate person I have ever seen. He had an easy explanation for it, and spoke of it very lightly, remarking that all he had to do was to think of himself first "an' de white folks nex'."

In turning into the wood we were following the lead of the little lady in the top-buggy, and I think that Colonel Ryder had no idea whither she was leading him. Yet he yielded himself and his men to her guidance with a confidence that few soldiers would have displayed. We had come very rapidly until we turned out of the main road, and then we went along more leisurely. This gave me time to overcome my natural stupidity, for I finally realized that our rapid movements on the main road were intended to place us beyond the reach of Forrest's advance guard.

The byway that we were now following appeared to be little used, yet it was a wide road and a good one, and probably served as the means of communication between isolated farms, or it may have led to some lonely grist mill which had been built for the convenience of that thinly-populated region. Though it was but little used it was plain to the eye, and I thought with a smile that if Captain Bill Forrest's company should happen to have any leisure a dozen or more of them would be sure to see where it led, in which event—

The smile faded away as soon as it came, for I thought of the little lady in the top-buggy who was driving ahead with so much confidence. She would be safe in any event, but what would she think of me if her brother should be captured or killed? I shrank from facing such a contingency; I shrank without knowing why. Being a young fellow, and feeling my importance as I have never felt it since, I imagined she would hold me responsible. I had interfered with her plans in more ways than one, and I felt that she owed me a grudge that would grow to enormous proportions should any harm come to her brother.

I was suddenly recalled to the affairs of the moment by hearing the screams of a woman, followed by a rifle shot. I saw Jane Ryder urging her horse forward, and, without waiting to see what Colonel Ryder proposed to do, I urged my horse forward, followed by Whistling Jim. The scream of the woman had sent a cold chill all through me, and I was in no humor for waiting to see what the others would do. I thought I heard shouts behind me, but I paid no attention to them. I turned my horse sharply to the left and headed him in the direction from which the sounds had come.

Keeping a sharp eye ahead, I soon came in sight of a cabin sitting lonely and forlorn in the middle of a small clearing. I saw more than this, for three men were engaged in a desperate effort to batter down the door. My horse bore me past the little lady in a flash, although she was using the whip. With a cry of "Halt and surrender!" I rode at the men pistol in hand. They whipped around the house without looking back, and ran off into the thick undergrowth, where it would have been both useless and dangerous to pursue them.

They left one of their number on the ground, the victim of the rifle shot we had heard. He begged lustily for both mercy and water. If he had been compelled to choose between the two I think he would have taken water. I gave him my canteen, which he emptied at a gulp and called for more. There was a strange silence in the house—a silence in decided contrast to the screams I had heard, and I wondered if the wretches had shot the woman. I started to knock on the door with the butt of my pistol, but Jane Ryder was before me.

"Only children do such foolish things," she exclaimed, and I thought she had scorn in her voice. "Sally! Sally Rodgers! Open the door if you are alive! Don't you know me? Your friends are here."

"Pardon me!" I said, pushing past Jane Ryder as the door opened. For a moment I could see nothing whatever, not even the woman who had opened the door, but when my eyes grew accustomed to the gloom that pervaded the house—all the windows were closed—I saw the big Irishman whom I had met at the tavern a few nights before. He was sitting very quietly in the chimney corner, but I observed that he had me covered with his rifle. I stared at him without a word, and he was equally as silent, but something in the situation—or in his face, for he had as pleasing a countenance as I have ever seen—caused me to laugh.

"Tis a long mile from a joke," he declared. "Ye see before ye Private O'Halloran av the sharpshooters. Wan av us is a prisoner, an' I'm thinkin' it's not meself."

"It is not given to every man," I replied, "to be taken prisoner while he is still a prisoner. You will have to speak to Colonel Ryder."

The woman had come from behind the door to greet Jane Ryder, and now she was giving her all the details of her troubles, her voice pitched in a very high key. Meanwhile, half a dozen children in various stages of undress swarmed from under the bed and stood staring at us. "The sound of the woman's screams," said I to Jane Ryder, "caused me to forget that I am a prisoner. I hope your brother doesn't think that I made that an excuse for running away."

"And why shouldn't a prisoner escape—if he can?" she asked after a moment's hesitation. "You'll never have a better opportunity to rejoin your command. You are not under parole, and you are under no obligations to my brother. You have only to mount your horse, beckon to your negro, and follow the path you will find at the back of the house. It leads by a grist mill. A part of your command has already passed on the road beyond the mill, but if you will go now you will fall in with the rearguard."

"Beggin' pardon," said O'Halloran, taking off his hat to the lady, "the lad has engagements wit' me. He's me twenty-ninth, all told, an' there's luck in odd numbers. If it's all the same to you, mum, he'll stay here."

"But it's not all the same to me, Mr. O'Halloran," she said, turning to the Irishman. "I prefer that he should go."

His eyes grew bigger as he stared at the lady. "Oh—" he exclaimed, and then paused with his mouth open. "Niver did I hope to see me gallant Captain in this rig. It doesn't become ye at all. The trimmin's make ye a fut shorter, an' be me soul! ye was short enough to begin wit'." His amazement made her laugh, but she made no reply.

HE HAD ME COVERED

"Are you going?" she inquired, turning to me. I hesitated. Undoubtedly here was an opportunity, but something or other—some feeling or sentiment—call it what you will—held me back.

"Not now," I said finally. "Some other time, perhaps, but not now." I did not realize at the time why I held back—why I refused to be free.

She turned away from me with a petulant shrug of the shoulders, as much as to say that she was no longer under obligations to me for preventing her capture by the party that had raided the tavern. The big Irishman, who had evidently recognized the little lady as a person of some importance, went so far as to try to persuade me to make my escape, or, rather, to take advantage of the escape I had already made.

"If ye're stayin' thinkin' he's a woman, don't do ut. Don't stop for to say good-by, but straddle yure horse an' be off wit' ye."

But the little lady had a mind of her own, as I was shortly to discover. After she had talked with the woman for a few minutes, she turned to me.

"Will you ride with me a few miles?" she inquired. "Your negro can lead your horse."

I agreed with such promptness and eagerness that a faint tinge of color came into her face. But, in the bustle of getting away, I paid little attention to her appearance. She turned the buggy into the woods, and was soon driving along with no road to guide her. I had not the remotest idea whither she was carrying me, but by way of saying something I protested against the way she was pushing her horse. "You will need him after to-day," I explained.

"I have reason to be in a hurry," she said. "Horses are cheap enough with us. They are furnished by the Government."

"Still, he is a fairly good horse," I remarked, "and he deserves some consideration on his own account."

"Do you think so?" she cried. "I am sure you are very kind—to horses. If I am driving him too hard you have yourself to thank. You have upset all my plans, and I am not very happy. Don't you think a woman deserves as much consideration as a horse?"

"They are to be treated according to their deserts," I answered gravely. "They know what duty is. Private O'Halloran says that you are no woman, and I say that you are no man. Where does consideration fall in your case?"

"I ask for no more consideration than you would accord to a human being. Mr. O'Halloran has never seen me in my proper dress before, and he knows only how I appear at night when I am working for the cause of the Union. But who are you that you should judge of the deserts of men and women? You are nothing but a boy, and you'll not be different when you are a man. Instead of marching with your comrades, here you are riding in a buggy with a woman—and for what? In the name of Heaven, tell me for what?"

She seemed to be overcome by quite a little flurry of passion, and her manner irritated me. "You know why as well as I do," I replied soberly enough. "You heard the orders my General gave me in the first place, and, in the second place,

"BEGGIN' PARDON," SAID O'HALLORAN, "THE LAD HAS ENGAGEMENTS WIT' ME"

Are you
TIED to a Slow Machine?

The FOX TYPEWRITER

Will solve the problem and it is the only one that will.

A world's record of 219 words per minute has just been made on a FOX before a committee of judges by Mr. John A. Shields, of Ottawa, Kansas. The great advantage a FOX operator has is the ability with which the speed of the machine can be changed from regular to fast.

A typewriter capable of such speed means a perfect machine mechanically, and the FOX is the climax of 25 years of typewriter building.

If your office is to be equipped with "the best," this equipment should include FOX Typewriters. No others will give as good nor as long a service.

Second-hand typewriters of other makes are taken in part payment at their highest value.

FOX Typewriters are placed on trial anywhere free. Let us make you a proposition to equip your office. The results obtained will warrant the investment.

FOX TYPEWRITER CO., Ltd.
Factory and Executive Office
468-488 N. Front St.
GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

Branch offices and agencies in principal cities.

you know that I am a prisoner. It is odd that you can play a game and forget the score. I imagined when I started that my duty would be the greatest pleasure of my life."

"Do you know where you are going now?" she inquired very seriously.

"It is a matter of indifference to me," I answered. "Wherever I go, I am in the hands of Providence."

"If you could believe that," she remarked, "it would do you a world of good."

I laughed at her serious manner. "Believe it!" I exclaimed. "Why, it is too plain for mere belief. I do not believe it—I know it."

She was silent for a long time, and when she did speak her words showed that the matter was still on her mind. "It seems to me very peculiar," she said, "that one so young should have such solemn thoughts."

"Why do you call them solemn thoughts?" I asked. "Can anything be more cheerful than to know that you are altogether in the hands of a higher Power—to know that you will be taken care of; or, if you perish, to know that it will be in the very nick of time."

"You are too serious to be romantic," she said. "I should like to see you making love."

"I can gratify your humor with a right good will—only the lady I would make love to despises me."

"I'll never believe it," she declared, and it was evident that she meant what she said.

"That is because you have only a vague idea of the cruelty of woman when she has a man at her mercy—and knows it."

"I should like to see some woman at your mercy," she said. "No doubt you would give free play to the strap and the rawhide and other implements of the slave-driver."

Her words made me wince, and I must have shown the wound, for when I looked at her her countenance wore an expression of regret and repentance. "You must forgive me," she declared. "If we were to be thrown together you would have to forgive me fifty times a day."

"Well, I thank Heaven," I exclaimed with some feeling, "that I was never at the mercy of more than one woman, and that fact was mitigated somewhat. She was arrayed in the garb of a man, and I was so sorry for her that I forgot she had me at her mercy."

"You should have told her," the little lady declared. "Perhaps if she had known, her conduct would have been vastly different. You never know what a woman will do until she has been put to the test."

"She did a good deal," I said sullenly. "She called me a coward, a rebel and a traitor."

"Then she must have been in despair," replied the little lady in the most matter-of-fact way. "When you are a little older you will discover that despair has an anger all its own. But I hope you will never feel it," she sighed. "Any one can see that you know very little about women."

"I hope my ignorance does me no harm," I suggested.

"Not the slightest," she answered. "It is a help to you. It is the sort that goes with youth, and I had rather have your youth than all the experience in the world."

The answer I made I shall always regard as an inspiration. "You can have my youth," I said, "if you will take all that goes with it." For one or two little moments she either doubted her ears or failed to catch my meaning. But when she could no longer doubt—when she was obliged to understand me—she hid her face in her hands to conceal the result of her emotions. I seized her hands and compelled her to look at me. She was blushing like a schoolgirl. "Is my youth, with all its appurtenances, worth your acceptance?" I asked. She made no reply, and I think she would have maintained silence the rest of the way but for my persistent chattering.

To me her embarrassment was very beautiful—thrilling, indeed—and in some mysterious way her youth came back to her, and she seemed to be no more than sixteen. "My youth is not too youthful for you," I insisted. "I have grown very much older lately, and you have become a girl again in the last five minutes." She was still silent, and I took advantage of it to draw her hands under the lap-robe. "There is no reason why your fingers should freeze," I said.

"They are not likely to—now," she declared, and, though it may have been pure imagination, I thought she leaned a little nearer, and the bare idea of such graciousness on her part seemed to change my whole

PARKER

Lucky
TRADE MARK
Curve

More than 2,000,000 PEOPLE USE THEM because of the LUCKY CURVE 9,000 of the Best dealers sell them.

FOUNTAIN PEN

If your dealer does not keep Parker Pens, write to us. We will see that you have an opportunity to examine them. 20-p. catalogue and "The Reasons Why" mailed upon request.

THE PARKER PEN CO., 90 Mill St., Janesville, Wis., U. S. A.

Some Men Pay

$10,000 for an expert to manage their advertising. There are others who pay $5 for an annual subscription to PRINTERS' INK—the leading journal for advertisers and business men, published every Wednesday—and learn what all the advertisers are thinking about. But even these are not the extremes reached. There are men who lose over $100,000 a year by doing neither one.

Young men and women who have an ambition to better their future by acquiring a thorough knowledge of advertising and who wish to become proficient in the art of writing advertisements are invited to send me ONE DOLLAR for a THREE MONTHS' TRIAL SUBSCRIPTION to PRINTERS' INK and such information as they may care to ask.

Address

CHARLES J. ZINGG,
Managing Editor,
10 Spruce Street, New York.

Union-made Cigars by Mail

We have cut loose from jobbers and sell our cigars direct to smokers, giving them the advantage of all between profits. Factory is strictly a Union concern, employing highest-skilled labor and using nothing but old, well-cured and finely blended tobaccos.

We are sure that a trial of our cigars will make you a permanent customer, and will send you a sample box of 12, charges prepaid, for 50 cents, or 25 for $1.00.
Grenoltra Cigar Co., P. O. Box 187, Dept. X, Lancaster, Pa.

"It's Always May in Hawaii"

Average Temperature for the Year 1903 was 75.07 Deg. These beautiful Tropical Islands are cooled by constant trade winds. A wonderful variety of impressive scenery. Summer seas for basking the year 'round. Unexcelled Modern Accommodations. Before fixing an itinerary for your outing

HEAR OF HAWAII!

Full information from all railroads, or address HAWAII PROMOTION COMMITTEE Representing the Territory of Hawaii Chamber of Commerce Merchants Association, HONOLULU, T. H. Send for beautiful souvenir book, full of interesting photographs and information.

THE "BEST" LIGHT

is a portable 100 candle power light, costing only 2 cents per week. Makes and burns its own gas. Brighter than electricity or acetylene and cheaper than kerosene. No Dirt, No Grease, No Odor. Over 100 styles. Lighted instantly with a match. Every lamp warranted.

Agents Wanted Everywhere
THE "BEST" LIGHT CO.
5-25 E. 5th St.
CANTON, OHIO

THE BEST LIGHT

U.S. Patent Eye-Glass Guard
DON'T MAKE YOUR NOSE—No Pressure—Firm—Safe—Easy. Sticks to Any Nose. Will Replace Spectacles. Ask your optician or write
BORSCH & CO.
D. 103 Adams St. Chicago, Ill.

Mail Orders Exclusively. No Branches or Agents.

Spring Suits

$8 to $50

MADE TO YOUR ORDER
We Guarantee to Fit You
CATALOGUE AND SAMPLES FREE

Have you thought of your spring dresses and skirts? Our designers have been at work here and in Europe, getting together the newest ideas and the most pleasing effects. The results are shown in our new Spring Catalogue, mailed free on request, together with a splendid collection of samples of the newest and most fashionable fabrics.

We make every garment especially to order—that is the secret of the perfect fit and stylish appearance of our garments. We cater to the requirements of the woman of taste. We study your figure from measurements taken in accordance with our simple measurement diagram, and make a garment that pleases you. We emphasize the good points of the figure and conceal the defects. We save you time, money and annoyance, and pay the express charges to any part of the United States.

YOUR MONEY REFUNDED IF WE FAIL TO SATISFY YOU.

Our Spring Catalogue illustrates:

Tailored Suits, - - - - -	$8 to $50
Handsome Skirts, - - - - -	$4 to $20
Etamine Costumes, - - - - -	$10 to $40
Mohair and Brilliantine Suits, - - - - -	$8 to $40
Mohair Skirts, - - - - -	$4 to $15
Spring Jackets, - - - - -	$7 to $30

Walking Suits and Skirts, Rainy Day Suits, Travelling Dresses, Rain Coats, etc.

We do not carry Wash Goods nor make Silk Shirt-Waist Suits. Our Catalogue contains explicit directions for taking measurements correctly.

We guarantee to fit and please you. If we do not, return the garment promptly and we will refund your money. Catalogue and a large assortment of samples will be sent free to any part of the United States. Ask for New Spring Catalogue No. 51. In requesting samples mention about the color you desire and we will send a full line of exactly what you wish.

NATIONAL CLOAK AND SUIT COMPANY,
119 and 121 West 23d Street, New York.
Established 15 years.

BUY A BROWER Wood Mantel

We have the largest variety and give the best value for the money. Beautiful Oak Mantels complete with tile and grate $13.50 to $150.00. Delivered free East of Mississippi River. Points beyond pro-rata. No. 1065, as here illustrated, gives a fair idea of our prices. Beautiful Golden Oak, 7 feet high, 5 feet wide, French beveled mirror, 18 x 36 ins., complete with best tiles and grate, delivered as above, on receipt of $30.00. Absolute guarantee of satisfaction, or money refunded.

Send for 56-page illustrated catalogue, showing 50 new and exclusive mantels. It's free.

C. F. BROWER & CO., Lexington, Kentucky
"The Mail Order Mantel House."

SOUTHERN HOMES
A Handsomely Illustrated Portfolio of picturesque, artistic and up-to-date One-Story Cottages entirely unique and convenient, and of Two-Story Houses in elegant designs at moderate cost. Sent post-paid for $1.00. Money back if not satisfied.

CHAMBERLIN & THOMPSON, Architects
Box 295 BIRMINGHAM, ALABAMA Dept. A nature. All the folly of youth went out of me, and love came in and took its place and filled my whole being. What I had been belonged to the remote past; I knew that I should never be the same again.

"I offered you my youth," I said, "and now I offer you my manhood, such as it is. You must answer yea or nay."

She gave me a quick, inquiring glance, and her face told me all that I desired to know. "Neither yea nor nay," she replied. "We are both very foolish, but, of the two, I am the more foolish. We are trying to look too far ahead; we are prying into the future, and the future is away beyond us. Everything you say and everything I have in my mind is absurd, no matter how agreeable it may be. Do you care enough for me to desert your comrades and fling your principles to the four winds? Do I care enough for you to leave my people and give my sympathies to your side?" She was smiling as she spoke, but I knew that she was very serious, and I made no reply. "I am going to tell you the simple truth," she went on. "I do care enough for you to leave everything for your sake, for there can be no real love where there is not a willingness to sacrifice all—Oh, I don't know why women are compelled to make all the sacrifices."

"She not only does that," I replied, "but she is compelled to bear the burden of them alone. Man is a hindrance rather than a help, but I am here to help you."

"Then help me in the right way," she implored.

"I will," I replied; "but here is an argument that is worth all the rest," and with that I drew her to me and pressed my lips to hers. She made no resistance, but somehow the argument did not appeal to her reason.

"I could kiss you twice ten thousand times," she declared, "but facts would remain the same. I have heard that your people have great notions of honor, and I hope it is true in your case."

Well, it was only too true, and I knew it, but, manlike, I must take some reprisal from the truth. "Your mother told me," I said, "that you have a great knack of hurting those you love."

She leaned against me with a sigh. "If I thought that the truth could really hurt you," she declared, "I should never be happy again in this world, but it is something else that hurts, and it is hurting me a great deal worse than it is hurting you."

I suppose I am not the only man in the world that has been caught in the desert that sometimes stretches its barren wastes between love and duty. I knew that if I but held out my hand to this little woman she would give up all, and, assuredly, had she held out her hand to me I should have flung duty to the winds. But she was of a different mould. The only comfort I had was in feeling that the sacrifice was mutual.

I longed for her brother to ride up behind us, so that I might still be a prisoner, but she had provided against that. I realized at last that I had never been regarded as a prisoner. I should have been grateful, but I was not—at least, not at the moment. If, as has been said, a man cuts a ridiculous figure when he is sulking, my appearance must have been truly laughable. But the little lady was very patient. Her eyes were so full of tears, as she afterward confessed, that she could hardly see to guide her horse.

When I came to take note of my surroundings I could not refrain from uttering an exclamation of surprise. We had issued from the forest, when or how I knew not, and were now ascending a very steep hill. Looking back, I saw a mill behind me, and noticed that Whistling Jim was engaged in conversation with the miller. He was evidently negotiating for meal or flour; but it all came to me as in a dream.

"Did you see the mill as we came by?" I asked.

"Certainly," the little lady replied.

"Didn't you hear me speak to the miller?"

"I don't know how I am to forgive you for seeing and hearing things. I didn't know we had come out of the wood."

She laughed merrily and laid her face against my arm, but when she lifted it she was crying. "Oh, don't make it too hard for me," she pleaded. "I am not myself to-day. Duty has been poisoned for me, and I shall be wretched until this war is over. Surely it can't last long."

"Not longer than a century," I said.

"Look yonder!" she exclaimed.

We had now reached the top of the hill, and when I looked in the direction in which she pointed I saw a sight that thrilled me.

(TO BE CONCLUDED)

Model "H"

Price $850.00, is a strong, light Touring Car, having an 81-inch wheel base. It starts from the seat, is equipped with four elliptic springs, detachable tonneau, brass side lamps and horn. It carries five people comfortably. It is built to run easily and ride smoothly, and has no equal at the price, and few at double the price.

Rambler

Touring Cars

Six different models $650.00 to $1,350.00 at the factory.

Model "H" $850.00 at the factory. Model "K" with four lamps and horn, $1,200.00 at the factory. Rambler Delivery Wagons, with detachable top, $850.00 at the factory.

Our new illustrated catalogue shows each different style of car and tells its special points of merit. Shall we mail you a copy?

Thomas B. Jeffery & Company,
Kenosha, Wis., U. S. A.

Chicago Branch, 304 Wabash Ave.
Boston Branch, 145C Columbus Ave.

THE GOLDEN GATE

The Florsheim SHOE

Style
No. 1871

Bench Made

"Florsheim"—the shoe that keeps its shape. Your exact size and style is ready for you—are you not ready for them? Bench Made, hand finished for $5.00. Say "Florsheim" to your dealer, he knows.

"A shoe just like your custom shoemaker used to make."

FREE—Send today for our booklet, "The Florsheim Way of Foot Fitting." Shows facts of interest to every shoe wearer. Also full information where you can buy the "Florsheim" Bench Made Shoe.

FLORSHEIM & COMPANY
Chicago, U. S. A.

IMPROVED HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS

are the only rollers which are worth while considering.

They obviate the use of ladders, are easy to adjust, always work well and are so simple, so well made and so durable that they will last as long as the house does.

If you want your window shades to work properly, freely, to look well and always keep in shape, be sure you get the rollers with the autograph signature of

Stewart Hartshorn
on label

WOOD ROLLERS — TIN ROLLERS

We Carpet Your Floor — $3

WITH OUR NEW

Brussels Art Rugs

Can be used on both sides, all colors and sizes, in beautiful patterns.

Sanitary, Artistic, Economical

Easily cleaned, warranted to outwear higher priced carpets. Expressage prepaid. New and enlarged catalogue, showing rugs in actual colors free. Money refunded, if not satisfied.

Sanitary Mfg. Co., Inc., 100 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

ARE YOU SATISFIED

with your present position and salary? If not write us for plan and booklet. We have openings for Managers, Secretaries, Advertising Men, Salesmen, Bookkeepers, etc., paying from $1,000 to $10,000 a year. Technical, Clerical and Executive men of all kinds. High grade exclusively.

HAPGOODS (Inc.)

Suite 509, 309 Broadway, New York

STENOGRAPHY Book-keeping, etc., thoroughly taught. Graduate helped to situations. Complete Course for Home Study, $5. Catalogue free. C. C. GATHER, Box 907, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., 112 West 12th Street, New York, N. Y.

For Your Desk

Free to You with Your Name in Gold

This is the most convenient device ever invented for filing and classifying clippings, illustrations, manuscripts and all miscellaneous matters which some time or other you may want without a minute's delay. It is a savings bank for information—worth 47 scrap books. It consists of a number of specially made holders arranged in a substantial, airtight, dust-proof box. Each holder not only shows what is contained in it, but by an ingenious indexing system shows just where everything else referring to its contents may be found. Especially useful to business men because it sets conveniently on your desk and takes care, absolutely, of all papers and data that you might otherwise lose or forget. This cabinet is a genuine Library Filing Cabinet never before made in desk size and has sold for from $15.00 to $500.00 in larger sizes.

The desk cabinet which we offer you free is equal in every respect to the expensive kinds except in size. The free offer is in connection with

SYSTEM

Edited by A. W. SHAW

SYSTEM gives every month 164 or more pages of indispensable information for business men. SYSTEM is essential to business success. And so is SYSTEM, the magazine. It tells every month all the new business tricks that save time—the little office wrinkles that save worry. Through SYSTEM you can learn all that anyone can possibly tell you about system and business methods. The regular reading of SYSTEM will solve your business perplexities—but if it does not, SYSTEM has a staff of experts—practical business men—who will answer your questions gladly and cheerfully and promptly. This service will cost you not one single penny—if you are a subscriber to SYSTEM. The price of SYSTEM is two dollars a year. It is worth a great deal more than that to any alert man with his eyes on the main chance.

An official of the National Cash Register Company says: "The ideas gathered from your magazine have enabled me to formulate systems for Mr. Patterson's letters, books, pamphlets, orders, etc., etc., which have simplified the work greatly." "I have learned more from SYSTEM in five months than in ten years of hard study and knocks in business. It is worth ten times the charges for it."

F. A. FORTBRIK, Baraboo, Wisconsin.

Special Offer to Post Readers:

We said the desk cabinet would cost you nothing. Here is the way. Send us two dollars for a year's subscription to SYSTEM and we will send you, every cent prepaid, a cabinet with your name in gold on the top. Write your name and address in the white space opposite; tear out this advertisement and mail it to us. Write plainly, so that we will make no mistake in setting your name. Include the money and we will enter you as a subscriber. Send us an expert consultation certificate, entitling you to free advice—and ship you the cabinet. Act at once. We have only a few of the cabinets on hand and we believe they will be snapped up in a hurry. ACT.

THE SYSTEM COMPANY
913 First National Bank Building, Chicago

CHICAGO PROJECTING COMPANY
225 Dearborn Street, Department L, Chicago, Ill.

EASTER SPOON
Sterling Silver of Special Easter Design, sent in a dainty Easter box, by mail, on receipt of 25c in coin or stamps. Our beautiful catalogue, containing thousands of Easter gifts, silver novelties, fine leather goods, jewelry, silverware, etc., sent FREE upon receipt of postal. The Warren Manufacturing Co., Gold and Silversmiths, 261 Middle St., Portland, Me.

MEMOIRS OF A BELL BOY

By S. E. Kiser

XIV

Once, when her instrument was workin' bad
The operator hit it with her fist
And nearly broke her round, soft little wrist—
I never s'posed that she could get so mad.
When I told ma it seemed to make her glad.
She says a girl that looks as nice as pie
Sometimes has awful thoughts: I wonder why
Ma's always knockin' so? It makes me sad.

XV

Some people make me sick. They act as though They'd leased this hemisphere. See that boy there.
The way he tilts his head up in the air
And struts around so everybody'll know
He's cut his second teeth. Now watch him go
And ask about the telegrams. I'll bet
Nobody ever telegraphed him yet.
Or if they did it's comin' mighty slow.

When she was operatin' yesterday
He leaned against the railin', lookin' wise
And spoilin' blanks and makin' goo-goo eyes.
I wish he'd pay his bill and go away,
Or that she'd slap his face for gettin' gay.
When fellows hang around a girl to buzz
Her hours at a time the way he does
I wonder how they think of things to say?

Mike says he never seen a woman yet
That hated men fer showin' them they'd like
To take them in their lovin' arms and hike
Away to where nobody else could get.
Mike says it doesn't seem to make them fret
When men get gone on them—I guess I'll strike
Out bold, because it must be so, fer Mike
He's had two wives, and knows a lot, you bet.

There goes that dude again, confound the luck!
I wish he'd get a telegram that said
Some chap was comin' here to punch his head,
And he'd fergit how sweet she was, and duck.
Mike says that when a fellow shows he's struck
A woman hardly ever raises Ned
Or seems to get to wishin' she was dead—
Gee whiz! He's went and give her chin a chuck.

XVI

The Johnny's went away that got so brash;
I let his blamed old satchel fall and smash
When him and me was goin' out the door;
His razor and his brush rolled on the floor.
Mixed with his nightshirt and some other trash,
He'd just smiled back at her and raised his lid!
I'd hate to get let down the way he did:
She laughed, and all the rest let out a whoop—
I never seen a guy so mad before:
He got his things together with a swoop—
I guess he'll never be our guest no more.

I s'pose I lost a tip, but I don't care,
I'd rather have the chance fer gettin' square;
What good is havin' money, anyway,
If havin' it don't keep you feelin' gay?
Nor make you push your chest out in the air?
I snuck away, out by the barber shop,
And laughed so hard I couldn't seem to stop:
Mike says that every laugh you ever laugh
Is something that you're richer fer, and so
I gained about eight dollars and a half—
They called me down and nearly bounced me, though.

XVII

I wish somebody'd kick me through a fence;
I must be gettin' dotty; I'm so dense
I couldn't see half through an iron gate;
Why, any one could string me while you wait;
No wonder Morton says I'm shy of sense.
A man arrived here yesterday forenoon
Who seemed to be a fighter, and as soon
As ever I had spotted him I flew
And grabbed his satchel and got useful. Say,
His clo's were great, he had on djmun's, too—
I picked him fer a winner right away.

It wasn't tips I thought of, understand:
I hoped that mebbey I could touch his hand;
I brought him pens and ink and things and stood Around to be as useful as I could
And let him see I thought that he was grand.
I'd like to bump my head against a wall,
Because he ain't a pugilist at all.
I'll bet he never even seen a ring;
He's just an author that is writin' books;
That shows that you can never tell a thing
About how great a man is by his looks.

AUTO-BOATS

The latest fad

Speed 12 to 35 miles. Sizes 30 to 70 feet, using our own new design, the "Speedway" Gasoline Motor.

We also build The Only Naphtha Launch, Electric Launches, Alco Vapor Launches, Steam and Sail Yachts.

Our show rooms contain 100 finished Launches to select from Send 10 cents in stamps for new catalogue of Auto-boats, Naphtha or Alco Vapor Launches

Gas Engine & Power Co. and Charles L. Seabury & Co., Consolidated

MORRIS HEIGHTS, NEW YORK CITY

Down Town Office, 11 Broadway

Chicago Office, 1409 Michigan Ave.

W. L. DOUGLAS

$3.50 SHOES WORTH $5.00

The Leading Styles Originate in Brockton, the Manufacturing Center of Men's Fine Shoes in this Country. Styles Originated by My Expert Model Maker Are Copied Everywhere.

W. L. Douglas $3.50 shoes have by their excellent style, easy-fitting and superior wearing qualities, achieved the largest sale of any $3.50 shoe in the world. They are just as good as those that cost you $5 to $7—the only difference is the price. If I could take you into my factory at Brockton, Mass., the largest in the world under one roof making men's fine shoes, and show you the infinite care with which every pair of Douglas shoes is made, you would realize why W. L. Douglas $3.50 shoes are the best shoes produced anywhere. If I could show you the difference between the shoes made in my factory and those of other makes, you would understand why Douglas $3.50 shoes cost more to make, why they hold their shape, fit better, wear longer, and are of greater intrinsic value than any other $3.50 shoe on the market to-day.

W. L. Douglas High-Grade Boys' Shoes, $2.00 and $1.75

Douglas uses Corona Collatin in his $3.50 shoes. Corona Collatin is conceded everywhere to be the finest patent leather yet produced.

Fast Color Eyelets Used Exclusively.

W. L. DOUGLAS, 166 SPARK STREET, BROCKTON, MASSACHUSETTS

WILLIAMS' SHAVING SOAP

No Burning Sensations

"Having used Williams' Shaving Soap for years I can especially recommend it to those who have a tender or sensitive skin, as after shaving I do not notice the 'burning sensations' that other soaps cause."

Sold in the form of Shaving Stick, Shaving Tablets and Shaving Cream throughout the world.

THE J. B. WILLIAMS CO., Glastonbury, Conn., U. S. A.

DEARBORN JUNIOR Typewriter

Guaranteed the most complete and perfect device of its kind ever sold. We ship on approval for $12.00, freight prepaid east of Rocky Mts. Money returned if desired. Fair proposition, isn't it? Solid Golden Oak, 42 ins. long, 24 ins. deep. Invaluable note book holder free with each cabinet. Illustrated catalogue Free. With door to paper cabinet price $13.00.

Ask about the Dearborn Typewriter Chair, $5.00.

Dearborn Desk Company
1926 1st Av., Birmingham, Ala.; 806 Williams Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

STOP FORGETTING!

THE KEY TO SUCCESS

Is the Dickson School of Memory's Mail Course

Simple, inexpensive, easily acquired. Increases business capacity and social prestige by giving an alert, ready memory for names, faces, details of business, study. Develops will, capacity for thought, concentration. Booklet and trial copyrighted lesson FREE. Write now. Thousands of Successful Students.

Dickson School of Memory, 932 The Auditorium, Chicago

AFTER ALL CARTER'S INK IS THE BEST

AN OLD BOOKKEEPER IS DISCRIMINATING
Better take his advice and use CARTER'S.
Send for Booklet, "Inklings"—FREE.

THE CARTER'S INK CO., BOSTON, MASS.

DO YOU

WANT IT?

It is a clever book by the cleverest men in the country—such men as DEWEY, CHAUTE, COCHRAN, BURKE, JOHN ALLEN—it is called "Some After Dinner Speeches," not to mention a lot of Anecdotes of Famous Wits, and pages of Toasts for Occasion. It is a book worth having, for it contains twenty portraits of great speakers. A total of two hundred and sixty-two pages, bound in buckram with gold stamps.

Some After Dinner Speeches

is published for one purpose—to give to business men and office men who will risk a dollar for a year's subscription the only magazine in the world published solely for them.

It is the only magazine that a business man can read 32 days a year and find a use for what he reads in the everyday business of those days.

Over 90,000 Business Men Read

The Book-Keeper AND Business Man's Magazine

We do not propose to take up this space at 32 cents a word to tell business men about the publication, let them Read the Partial Contents of the February Number

200 Pages—110 Illustrations 129 Pages of Reading Matter

Cobwebs in British Business, by Frank Parsons; Some Governing Ideas of a Great Store, by Helen May; Trade Possibilities in China, by W. H. Barker; The Superintendent of Progress, by Elliott Feltner; The Evil of Systemless Methods, by Dr. O. S. Menden; Comfortable Homes for Little Money, by C. F. Scher; Success Qualities in Employees, by Cyrus H. Field; Fore and Aft Accounts; Accounting Methods for the Lumber Business; Lost, Strayed and Stolen Freight; Accounting Methods for the Textile Business; Accounting Methods Used by Manufacturers of Ladies' Garments; A Novel Factory Cost System; Shipping Records in the Furniture Business; Cost System for a Furniture Manufacturing Co.; Simple System of Accounting for a Retail Store; The Municipal Balance Sheet, by Duncan McDermott; Retail Cigar and Tobacco Accounting; Our Monthly Prime Competition; Accounting for Branch Stores; Clearing House Settlements; A Question of Cash Discount; Practical Hints on Advertising, by C. A. Bates; Mail Order Department, by G. R. Brown; Shorthand in Ten Easy Lessons, Lesson VI; Shorthand Department, by H. L. James; The Book-Keeper Junior; The Credit Man; Long Terms of Credit; General Department of a Savings Bank; Lessons in Business Penmanship; Among the Advertisers.

SEND US 15 CENTS

In stamps or any way it suits you best—and we will send you The Book-Keeper and Business Man's Magazine for three months. And then, if you like it well enough to send a dollar for a year, we will send you a copy of "Some After Dinner Speeches," absolutely free of charge. Of course if you are willing to risk the dollar now we will send you a copy of "Speeches" and "The Book-Keeper" for one year.

Offer No Good Without Coupon

TEAR THIS OUT

"The Book-Keeper and Business Man's Magazine" Book-Keeper Building, Detroit, Mich.

Sir:—Please find enclosed.....for which send me as per your offer in The Sat. Eve. Post.

Name.....
Street.....
Town.....

Old Gorgon Graham

(Continued from Page 4)

over Percy. He didn't say a word for a few minutes, just kept boring into the young man with his eyes, and though Percy had a cheek like brass Ham's stare went through it as easy as a two-inch bit goes into boiler-plate. Then, "Take that cigar out of your mouth," he bellowed. "What d'ye mean by coming into my office smoking cigars?"

Percy had always smoked whatever he blamed pleased, wherever he blamed pleased before, though Old Ham wouldn't stand for it from any one else. But because things have been allowed to go all wrong for twenty-five years it's no reason why they should be allowed to go wrong for twenty-five years and one day; and I was mighty glad to see Old Ham rubbing the sleep out of his eyes at last.

"But, gov'ner," Percy began, throwing the cigarette away, "I really—"

"Don't you but me; I won't stand it. And don't you call me gov'ner. I won't have your low-down street slang in my office. So you're the great bull, eh? the great bull in a china shop! The great bull calf, you mean. Where'd you get the money for all this cussedness? Where'd you get the money? Tell me that. Spit it out—quick—I say."

"Well, I've got a million dollars," Percy dribbled out.

"Had a million dollars, you mean?"

"And an interest in the business, you know."

"Yep; I oughter. I s'pose you hocked that."

"Not exactly that; but it helped me to raise a little money."

"You bet it helped you; but where'd you get the rest? Where'd you raise the money to buy all this cash lard and ship it abroad? Where'd you get it? You tell me that."

"Well, ah—the banks—loaned—me—a—good deal."

"On your face."

"Not exactly that—but they thought—inferred—that you were interested with me—and without—"

"Oh! they did, eh! they did, eh!" Ham exploded. "Tried to bust your poor old father, did you! Would like to see him begging his bread, would you, or piking in the bucket-shops for five-dollar bills! Wasn't satisfied with soaking him with his own million! Couldn't rest when you'd swatted him with his own business! Wanted to bat him over the head with his own credit! And now you come whining around—"

"But, dad—"

"Don't you dad me, dad-fetch you—don't you try any Absalom business on me. You're caught by the hair, all right, and I'm not going to cut you down or chip in for the funeral expenses."

Right here I took a hand myself, because I was afraid Ham was going to lose his temper, and that's one thing you can't always pick up in the same place that you left it. So I called Ham off, and told Percy to come back in an hour with his head broker and I'd protect his trades in the meanwhile. Then I pointed out to the old man that we'd make a pretty good thing on the deal, even after we'd let Percy out, as he'd had plenty of company on the bull side that could pay up, and anyway, that the boy was a blamed sight more important than the money, and here was the chance to make a man of him.

We were all ready for Percy when he came back, and Ham got right down to business.

"Young man, I've decided to help you out of this hole," he began.

Percy chirped right up. "Thank you, sir," he said.

"Yes, I'm going to help you," the old man went on. "I'm going to take all your trades off your hands and assume all your obligations at the banks."

"Thank you, sir."

"Stop interrupting when I'm talking. I'm going to take up all your obligations, and you're going to pay me three million dollars for doing it. When the whole thing's cleaned up that will probably leave me a few hundred thousand in the hole, but I'm going to do the generous thing by you."

Percy wasn't so chipper now. "But, father," he protested, "I haven't got three million dollars; and you know very well I can't raise three million."

"Yes, you can," said Ham. "There's the million I gave you: that makes one. There's your interest in the business; I'll buy that for a million; that makes two. And I'll take

A 300 Page Book on Electricity

New enlarged edition.
First edition exhausted in two weeks.

$1.35

By Express (prepaid)

Size of page 7 x 10 in.
Printed on plate paper.
Bound in green linen.

Profusely illustrated with sections, diagrams, tables and full-page plates.

TO demonstrate the standard, scope and methods of the AMERICAN SCHOOL OF CORRESPONDENCE in teaching

Electrical Mechanical Stationary

ENGINEERING

Civil Sanitary Textile

ARCHITECTURE

DRAWING

TELEPHONY

by mail (see quarterly Bulletin described below) we have bound up four representative instruction papers in our Electrical Engineering Course under the title of

Practical Lessons in Electricity

and will send one copy, express prepaid, to every reader of THE SATURDAY EVENING POST who sends us $1.35 and the names of two persons whom he knows to be interested in the subjects we teach, designating the subject. (Address Room 1243.)

The book is invaluable to insurance men, as the chapter on wiring covers fully the requirements of the National Board of Underwriters; physicians and dentists find it full of information regarding the use of Electricity in their professional work; patent attorneys, teachers, owners of electric launches and automobiles find it a useful manual for ready reference.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN says:

"Practical Lessons in Electricity" consists essentially of four parts, all distinguished by a common-sense treatment of a subject, which, particularly in its elementary conceptions, is apt to—without the average student not a little. Prof. Crocker's wide experience as a teacher is apparent in the division on storage batteries. That portion of the work is characterized by a lucidity of treatment which is unfortunately not often found in books upon so recondite a subject. Mr. Crocker's division on electrical wiring may be regarded as an epitome of his well-known work on standard wiring—a simple, condensed account of what a fairly advanced student ought to know of this particular branch of applied electricity. Mr. Sager has performed what may well be considered the most difficult task allotted to any of the authors of this book, namely, that of presenting as briefly as possible the elementary conceptions of electricity. His first division on the rudiments of electricity follows more or less the beaten path of Silvanus Thompson and other writers of elementary textbooks. In his division on electric current, he has outlined with the help of fully simple mathematics the work which the electric current is capable of performing. Not the least valuable part of the book to the reader is a series of examination papers pertaining to the subjects treated."

THE AMERICAN TELEPHONE JOURNAL says:

"Practical Lessons in Electricity" is crisp and concisely written and well condensed. There are many points in the volume several tables and a whole lot of reference data which would be of value to one engaged in any technical line. The section on Storage Batteries by Prof. Crocker, of Columbia University, strikes us as being particularly good. It gives just the sort of storage battery information and tells it in just the sort of way that will reach the practical telephone man, who should at least have a good idea of this appliance which is now so common in these days of central energy."

Partial List of Subjects embraced:

STORAGE BATTERIES (by Prof. F. B. Crocker, Columbia University): Types; General Principles; Chemical Action; Data Sheets; Edison Storage Battery; Charging; Efficiency; Troubles and Remedies; Testing; Portable Batteries for Automobiles and Boats; etc.

ELECTRIC WIRING (by H. C. Cushing, Jr., author of Standard Wiring): Dynamo Installation; The Switch Board; Motor Installation; Tables; Transformers; Three-Wire System; Poles and Pole Setting; Inside Wiring; Arc Light Wiring; Conduit Work; Fixture Wiring; Cut-outs; Switches; Arc and Incandescent Systems; Fuses; Inspection; etc.

ELECTRIC CURRENT (by L. K. Sager, S. B.): Volt, Ampere, Ohm; Resistance; Conductivity; Tables; Circuits; Grouping of Cells; Quantity; Energy; Power; Coulomb; Joule; Watt, etc.

ELEMENTS OF ELECTRICITY (by L. K. Sager, S. B.): Experiments with Magnets; Conductors and Insulation; Leyden Jar; Voltaic Cell; Electromagnets; Induction Coil; Electrotyping and Electroplating; The Telephone; The Telegraph; Souder, Alphabet, Key, Battery, Relay, etc.

The book is easily worth $3.00, and we offer it at the above low price for a limited time, believing that it will be the means of interesting the purchaser further in the work of the American School of Correspondence.

College Preparatory Course

This course practically covers the work of the Scientific Academy of Armour Institute of Technology, and is accepted as fulfilling the requirements for entrance to the College of Engineering of that institution.

Illustrated 200-page quarterly Bulletin giving full outlines of our College Preparatory and 60 different courses in Electrical, Mechanical, Civil, Stationary, Marine, Locomotive Engineering, Architecture, Mechanical and Perspective Drawing, Pen and Ink Rendering, Structural Drafting, Telegraphy, Telephony and Textiles, including Knitting, Cotton and Woolen Cloth Manufacturing, etc., will be sent free on request.

American School of Correspondence

at
Armour Institute of Technology
Chicago, Ill.

Please mention
THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

Cut the buttons off your trousers

Suspender buttons are a thing of the past. You never liked them, never could trust them; but you had to have them, until now — when you can be forever freed from their treachery by the

Buttonless Suspender

Fastens to the trousers by a neat nickel-plated clasp, — the biggest little thing invented in 1903. You slip it over waistband, push down slide, and the clasp takes hold with a bull dog grip, yet positively cannot tear the cloth. Will take in drawers if desired; overalls, too.

And, another difference — the "Buttonless" has cut-off back as well as front; most convenient suspender made. Self-adjusting — ends run freely through cast-offs, front and back.

No fanciful notions in designs; no ridiculous harness.

Once you try the "Buttonless" you will never go back to the buttoned kind. The price is no higher —

50 Cents

ASK YOUR DEALER. If he won't supply you, we will. Sent postpaid on receipt of fifty cents.

WRITE FOR BOOKLET

EXPERIENCED AGENTS WANTED.

The Buttonless Suspender Company
West St., Bloomsburg, Pa.

DON'T JAR YOUR NERVES
Wear RUBBER HEEL Shoes

Swell "DON" Shoe $3.50

Fast Color Hooks and Eyelets — Don't turn Brassy UNION MADE.
SOLID RUBBER HEELS

WE GUARANTEE our DON Bright Colt Shoe to outwear patent leather shoes of any make, regardless of name and price, and not to break through with reasonable wear until after first sole wears out. Greatest leather ever known.

Sent to any address in the world upon receipt of $3.50. Money order or registered mail. For 25c extra, we prepay express. Money returned if not satisfied.

WANTED — AGENTS in every city and town and all foreign countries. We want to hear from all readers. Write for free sample of leather and terms to agent.

DON SHOE CO.
Factory F. Brockton, Mass.
Shoes sent C. O. D., privilege of examination, if you will send 50 cents to pay Express Charges.

Billiards $15

Burrows Portable Combination Billiard and Pool Table for Home Playing, $15 and up. 5 to 8 feet long. Set up on any house table; set away on end behind a door. 16 best balls, 4 cues, 40 implements and book of rules for 26 games gratis. Source of daily enjoyment for entire family. Sent on trial.

Write for Catalogue L and Colored Plates.
The E. T. Burrows Co., 112 Free St., Portland, Me.

INVENTIONS

patented and sale undertaken if patent is obtained through us. 20 years' experience. Send for booklet.
PATENT DEVELOPMENT COMPANY OF AMERICA
180 Broadway, New York City

your note at five per cent. for the third million. A fair offer, Mr. Graham?"

"Very liberal, indeed, Mr. Huggins," I answered.

"But I won't have anything to live on, let alone any chance to pay you back, if you take my interest in the business away," pleaded Percy.

"I've thought of that, too," said his father, "and I'm going to give you a job. The experience you've had in this campaign ought to make you worth twenty-five dollars a week to us in our option department. Then you can board at home for five dollars a week, and pay ten more on your note. That'll leave you ten per cent for clothes and extras."

Percy wriggled and twisted and tried tears. Talked a lot of flip-flap flub-doodle, but Ham was all through with the proud popper business, and the young man found him as full of knots as a hickory root, and with a hide that would turn the blade of an ax.

Percy was simply in the fix of the skunk that stood on the track and humped up his back at the lightning express — there was nothing left of him except a deficit and the stink he'd kicked up. And a fellow can't dictate terms with those assets. In the end he left the room with a ring in his nose.

After all, there was more in Percy than cussedness, for when he finally decided that it was a case of root hog or die with him he turned in and rooted. It took him ten years to get back into his father's confidence and a partnership, and he was still paying on the million-dollar note when the old man died and left him his whole fortune. It would have been cheaper for me in the end if I had let the old man disinherit him, because when Percy ran that Mess Pork corner three years ago he caught me short a pretty good line and charged me two dollars a barrel more than any one else to settle. Explained that he needed the money to wipe out the unpaid balance of a million-dollar note that he'd inherited from his father.

I simply mention Percy to show why I'm a little slow to regard members of my family as charitable institutions that I should settle endowments on. If there's one thing I like less than another it's being regarded as a human meal-ticket. What is given to you always belongs to some one else, and if the man who gave it doesn't take it back, some fellow who doesn't have to have things given to him is apt to come along and run away with it. But what you earn is your own and apt to return your affection for it with interest — pretty good interest.

Your affectionate father,
JOHN GRAHAM.

P. S. I forgot to say that I had bought a house on Michigan Avenue for Helen, but there's a provision in the deed that she can turn you out if you don't behave.

A Badge of Honor

THE Honorable John Wesley Gaines, Member of the House from Tennessee, says that while in Paris last summer he met a fellow-countryman who invariably sported a huge blue badge bearing the legend of the National Democratic Committee.

"After a time," says Mr. Gaines, "my curiosity as to why my fellow-citizen should be displaying such an emblem got the better of me. So I asked him the reason."

"Well, one day, at one of the big hotels I observed a number of chaps who got the best of me at all times. I bethought me that it would be a good plan to consult one of the waiters in the matter. This I did, paying the way with a tip.

"A great light burst upon me when I was politely informed by the waiter that one of the gentlemen indicated wore the Legion of Honor, that the other sported the insignia of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, and that the third was the proud possessor of the order of the Star of India. Gentlemen wearing these and other orders, added my informant, were invariably given the utmost consideration.

"So it didn't take me long to drop into line. I dug down into my trunk and pulled out the badge you now see pinned upon me; and I've worn it ever since. Of course, none of our French friends has the least idea what it represents, but it's a decoration, and that goes with them! Since I donned it nothing has been too good for me!"

THE
"K. B."
Shoulder
(Pat. Applied For)

We illustrate on this page our Top Coat made with the "K. B." Shoulder. Also the inside construction of a Kohn Brothers' Coat. This shoulder, when handled by skilled and expert tailors such as we employ, produces an effect equalled only in the very highest priced merchant tailored garment. Will dress you as well and save you half your clothes money. It has revolutionized clothes making.

Ask your dealer for Clothing with the "K. B." Shoulder. Look for our label. Suits and Overcoats from $10 to $35. Write for illustrated booklet, "The Clothes A Man Should Wear," No. 4.

KOHN BROTHERS

CHICAGO

Save Cigar=Money

You can get better and more satisfactory cigars and save money

BY BUYING DIRECT FROM OUR FACTORY

We give you exactly what you want for one-half the price you have been paying. 48 different brands of hand-made cigars — $2. to $15. per hundred, express prepaid anywhere in the United States, and your

MONEY BACK IF NOT SATISFACTORY

Our 32-page illustrated catalogue shows the different brands, sizes and prices of our cigars. Write for it to-day — it is free.

Yours Truly is one of our most popular brands. Imported Havana filler, Sumatra wrapper. $4 per 100; $40 per 1000; $1.15 for 25 (sample box) express prepaid. Equal to any 3 for 25c. Everybody who smokes our Four's Truly cigar is delighted with it. Send us a trial order.

JULIUS ALVAREZ & CO., 1051-53 Hamilton Street, ALLENTOWN, PA.
Makers of Havana Cigars

Does Your Money Earn 5%

Assets $1,700,000
Surplus and Profits $160,000

Invested with the INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS AND LOAN CO. it will bear earnings at this rate for every day in our care. Subject to withdrawal whenever you desire. Established over 10 years. Our patrons, prominent clergymen, professional and business men all over the country, heartily endorse our methods. Our business conducted under N. Y. Banking Dept. supervision. Write for full particulars.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS AND LOAN CO.
1136 Broadway New York

LAMBERT

A "Wireless" Machine.
"Multum in Parvo."
Price, complete, $25. Descriptive booklet free.
LAMBERT TYPEWRITER CO.
1274 Broadway, N. Y. 80 La Salle St., Chicago
Baker & Hamilton, San Francisco, Cal.
Sales Agents Pacific Coast
Main Office and Factory, 79-83 Washington Street Brooklyn, N. Y.

STAMPS DID YOU EVER COLLECT? There is both pleasure and money in it. For only 10c, we will start you with an album 155 Different Genuine Stamps from Sandwich Is., Costa Rica 1893, etc., and Catalogue and 100 Coupon. Apts. Wtd. 80c Com. We buy Old Stamps. Illustrated List 3c.
C. E. HUSMAN STAMP CO., St. Louis, Mo.

LEGAL ADVICE Without Red Tape

Send me one dollar, stating the facts of your case, and I will forward a full opinion, without further charge. A. B. Gordon Davis, Attorney and Counselor at Law, 822 Mutual Life Building, Philadelphia, Pa.

I WILL give an opinion covering the full legal status of any question upon which you are in doubt affecting your business, family, personal or property rights.

The Improved Method of FINISHING FLOORS

old or new, for rugs or otherwise, with GRIFFIN'S Wood Crack and Crevices Filler and Finishing SPECIALTIES, is very simple and economical, not requiring skilled labor though the highest degree of perfection is attained. We give full instructions for treating all surfaces. Write to-day for our descriptive matter to GRIFFIN MFG. CO.
Dept. 4, Newark, New York

PRESIDENT SUSPENDERS

Comfort and Service. Guaranteed — "All breaks made good." 50 cents and $1.00. Any shop or by mail.

C. A. EDGARTON MFG. CO., Box 231, Shirley, Mass.

How Mr. Hickok Came to Cheyenne

(Concluded from Page 7)

as one might think, but in derision, and because Mr. Hickok looked like an agriculturist who had strayed from the fold.

"Got a potato ranch some'ers?" remarked the barkeeper. "Or meebby is it hay?"

Mr. Hickok made no retort as he paid the double price which the astute barman charged him. He knew he was derided, and he knew he was robbed; but, full of peace, he bore it in a spirit of wordless humility.

"Now, if that barkeep," he reflected, "knewed who I was he'd about hit three or four high places and be miles away."

Mr. Hickok inched toward a faro game which was raging in the rear. Though he had but one hundred dollars he bet the half on the "high card." The turn came, king-trey; Mr. Hickok's fifty were swept into the bank. Nothing discouraged, Mr. Hickok wagered the other fifty on the "high card." The turn came, deuce-eight. The dealer counted down twenty-five dollars.

"How's that?" asked Mr. Hickok.

"The limit's twenty-five," spake the dealer, and the lookout echoed: "Limit's twenty-five!"

"But you took fifty when I lost," observed Mr. Hickok.

"Oh! fifty goes if you lose," retorted the dealer insolently, and the lookout with echoing insolence repeated: "It goes if you lose!"

Then did Mr. Hickok rejoice because of a provident rheumatism that furnished him his excellent billiard-cue.

Bill! bang!

Mr. Hickok tapped the dealer and lookout. They fell from their respective perches like apples when one shakes November's bough. Having cleared a path to the feet of justice, Mr. Hickok reached across and helped himself to a roll of money which, to quote the scandalized barkeeper who beheld the rapine from afar, was "a roll big enough to choke a cow!"

Having repaired his money wrongs, as that portion of the Cheyenne public then and there present fell upon him, he resorted to his billiard-cue. A dozen heads suffered. He fought his way to the wall.

"Now, everybody fill his hand!" shouted Mr. Hickok. With that his eight-inch six-shooters came to the fore.

Mr. Hickok's goggles had fallen to the floor; his loosened yellow mane was flying like a war banner. Altogether, when thus backed against the wall, and behind a brace of Colt's best pistols, flowing locks, and eyes like gray fire, Mr. Hickok made a striking figure and one to live long in Cheyenne memory. Then one, sophisticated, yelled:

"It's Wild Bill!"

There was no dispute over Mr. Hickok's identity. The public at once conceded it, and began going through doors and windows in blocks of five. Mr. Hickok, thus deserted, limped slowly toward the front door. As he passed the bar its once supercilious custodian raised his head above its sloppy levels and asked in meekness: "Mr. Hickok, will you have a drink? It's on the house."

It was the next afternoon; the Cheyenne marshal, accompanied by Mr. Bowlby, proprietor of the Gold Room Saloon, paid a courtly visit to Mr. Hickok. The marshal was aggrieved.

"You ought not to come ambuscadin' into camp that a-way," he remonstrated, speaking of Mr. Hickok's modest advent into town. "It might have got a passel of Cheyenne people killed—some of our best people, too. It wa'n't right, Mr. Hickok. Only it's you I'd think it bordered on the treacherous."

"It ain't that I'm askin' it back, Mr. Hickok," observed Mr. Bowlby diffidently, "but I want to check up my game. Sech bein' my motive, would you-all mind informin' me how big a wad you got outen that drawer?"

"Which I shore couldn't say, Mr. Bowlby," returned Mr. Hickok languidly. "You see, I ain't counted it none as yet." Then, as one who arouses himself to deeds of friendly generosity: "But, Mr. Bowlby, I don't reckon now I oughter keep all that money. I'd feel easier if you'd let me split it with you."

"No 'bjections in the least," replied Mr. Bowlby politely.

"Which I should shore say as much!" exclaimed the marshal, in enthusiastic admiration of Mr. Hickok's liberality. "Thar's an offer good enough for a dog! An' now, gents," concluded the marshal, linking arms with Mr. Hickok and Mr. Bowlby, "let's go some'ers an' licker."

The Asiatic Crisis

One of the greatest struggles in history opens with the Russo-Japanese war. Its outcome may change the entire map of Asia and maybe Europe. What likelihood is there of other nations becoming involved?

Michael Davitt, Irish Patriot and former Member of Parliament, who went to Russia to investigate the Kishineff atrocities, in the New York Herald and New York American, Feb. 15, said:

"Look up the history of the Crimean War and find how long Russia fought England, France, Turkey and Sardinia combined, to find out how long the Czar's army can stand up against Japan."

RIDPATH'S HISTORY OF THE WORLD

"The only World's History that reads like a story book yet is recognized as a standard authority"

Royal Octavo, 11 Inches Tall, 5 Inches Wide, 2 1/2 Inches Thick, 6,500 Pages, 4,000 Illustrations. Weight 62 Pounds, Occupy 21 Inches Shelf Room—And Will be Sent on Seven Days' Approval.

At About HALF PRICE if You Write NOW.

Great newspapers and periodicals will spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to give you the latest news of battles and movements of the armies and navies. To appreciate what the great struggle means, you should go further back than the newspapers and magazines will take you. Read the records of the nations. You can't understand the news of the war unless you're reasonably familiar with the history and development of these countries. There is nowhere you can find everything you want to know so succinctly and interestingly told as in Ridpath's History of the World. It's a necessity at all times, and doubly so now.

A Few Slightly Rubbed Sets

In cleaning up our stock for the new year we find a few slightly "rubbed" and mismatched sets—no torn or soiled pages. The difference would scarcely be noticeable to anyone outside the book trade. Rather than rebind such a small lot, we will dispose of them at what they would be worth to us with the covers torn off, and on small monthly payments.

If you'd like to possess the only world's history that reads like a story book—yet is recognized by such men as William McKinley, Benjamin Harrison, Grover Cleveland, Dr. Cuyler, Bishop Vincent, and thousands more, as a standard authority and the greatest historical reference work in existence—send for the free specimen book TO-DAY, using the coupon below.

That specimen book will tell you all about the history—HOW it came to be written, HOW it will interest and entertain you, WHY you need it, and HOW you can secure one of the slightly mismatched sets at much less than the subscription price.

Ridpath's History of the World is a great big set of nine royal octavo volumes, with 4000 illustrations and many maps and color plates. You pay only $1 down. The complete set is sent at once. The rest you pay in small monthly payments. Cut off Coupon. Send to-day.

MERRILL & BAKER, Publishers, 9 and 11 E. 16th Street, NEW YORK

Sent on 7 Days' Approval

Cut This Corner Off Along This Line

NAME _____
ADDRESS _____
INQUIRY COUPON
If you mention The Saturday Evening Post you needn't cut out the coupon.

M. F. F.
Merrill & Baker
9 and 11 East 16th Street
NEW YORK

Without cost to me, please send the RIDPATH Sample page and illustration book, which contains specimens of the Race Charts, Chronological Charts, Colored Race-Type Plates, Engravings, Photo-Engravings, and Black-Color Plates, Test Pages, with full particulars and prices of the slightly damaged sets.

Stuyler's
LICORICE TABLETS
(5 AND 10c PACKAGES)
FOR COUGHS AND COLDS
MADE WITH PURE SPANISH LICORICE
GLYCERINE TABLETS
(10c POCKET TINS)
For relief of
HOARSENESS & THROAT AFFECTIONS
IF NOT SOLD BY YOUR DRUGGIST
MAILED FREE UPON RECEIPT OF PRICE.
Stuyler's 863 Broadway, N. Y. City

PATENT SECURED
Or Fee Returned. FREE opinion as to patentability. Send for Guide Book and What to Invent, finest publications issued for free distribution. Patents secured by us advertised free in Patent Record. SAMPLE COPY FREE.
EVANS, WILKENS & CO., 667 F St., Washington, D. C.

COMBINED
Shiner and Shoe Tree
ADJUSTS AUTOMATICALLY TO ANY LENGTH OF SHOE
Only shiner made having these features. Better than any $1.00 Shiner on the market. To introduce our OHLOSHINE SHOE DRESSING the best in the world, we will send one of these Shiners and a 25 cent pkg. of Dressing on receipt of 80 cents. Agents Wanted Everywhere
OHLOSHINE MFG. CO.
Winona, Minn.

HEN-LIKE HEAT
Uniformly diffused; quick-to-act water regulator; cold excluding walls; convenient trays; hydro-safety lamp; copper tank; every condition a duplicate of nature's way, make the Sure Hatch Incubator a more certain hatcher than your favorite old hen. Photos in free catalogue. I'll tell the truth.
Sure Hatch Incubator Co., Clay Center, Neb., or Columbus, O.

REX SUSPENDERS
Have no metal and are warranted for one year. If there's a break you get a new pair free. Where's the use of taking chances when you can be safe and sure. Buy a pair of Rex Suspenders at your dealer's, or postpaid by mail, for 80 cents. They are the strongest and lightest, yet have no buckles to rust and stain the linen.
Consolidated
Manhattan Suspender Co.
349 Broadway, Dept. 13
NEW YORK

100 PER CENT. HATCHES
Our new catalogue contains hundreds of them obtained by BUCKEYE INCUBATOR users in all parts of the U. S. Send for a copy and read the proof. It is free.
Buckeye Incubator Co., Box 21, Springfield, O.

OUR 31 YEARS'

EXPERIENCE and continued success is a guarantee to you of good quality and fair dealing. WE HAVE NO AGENTS anywhere, but sell direct to you, thus saving you the agent's and dealer's profit. We are the largest manufacturers of vehicles and harness in the world selling on this plan exclusively. We ship for examination, guaranteeing safe delivery. You are not nothing if not satisfied. Our large illustrated catalogue is free. Send for it.

No. 7914—Fine Wire-wheeled Driving Wagon with 14-inch Kelly Cordon Tires. Price complete $102.50. As good as sells for $25.00 more.

No. 220—Fine Light One-horse Cut-down Surrey. Price complete $58.00. As good as sells for $30.00 more.

No. 402—Fine Full-Leather Top Phaeton. Price complete $117.00. As good as sells for $50.00 more.

ELKHART CARRIAGE AND HARNESS MFG. CO. ELKHART, IND.

The Way To WEALTH

This Company is empowered by law to receive trust moneys. Executors depositing such moneys with the Company are absolved by law from responsibility as to loss. Being entirely removed from every speculative venture, it is better fitted to act as executor and to administer trusts than is the private individual. The fees in either case are the same.

THE Equitable Trust Company of New York will attend to every detail of your banking business.

Write for booklet A, "The Way to Wealth."

THE EQUITABLE TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK

15 Nassau St., Equitable Bldg., New York City
CAPITAL $3,000,000 SURPLUS $6,500,000

Punt FOOTBALL

As exciting as the game itself. Everyone who ever saw or heard of football will be interested in "Punt." Full of exciting touchdowns, goals from field, miss plays, etc. Played on a "gridiron" with football rules. Just the thing to make an evening pleasant for everyone.

Mailed postpaid $1.00 anywhere in the United States
THE PUNT CO.
106 Washington Street
Grand Rapids, Mich.

$9,000 Poultry Catalog
40 kinds Turkeys, Geese, Ducks, Chickens, Fowls and eggs cheap. 100 grand pictures, 20 house plans. We make hens lay, cure disease, etc. Send 10 cts. for mailing catalogue. Incubators 30 days free trial.
J. R. Brabson, Jr. & Co., Box 116, Delavan, Wis.

The Singular Miss Smith

(Continued from Page 11)

cook vegetables, if you have a receipt book. I'm not experienced. I told Mrs. Lehn so. Didn't she tell you?"

"Not experienced! I should say so! What in the world did that woman send you here for? I don't believe you'll do for us at all. But wait"—Anne had risen with pleased alacrity—"I shall keep you for a week, anyway. Perhaps" (vaguely) "I can teach you. What is your name?"

"Annie Smith, ma'am."

"And what wages do you expect?"

"Mrs. Lehn said you paid twelve dollars a month; she said you would help with the cooking."

"Well, of course, I expect to see to things in the kitchen; but for twelve dollars a month and board—remember you are far better off than a factory girl in that respect—I shall expect you to get the meals, of course."

"What else do you expect me to do, ma'am?"

The girl's tone was respectfully inquiring, but Mrs. de Puyster-Jones' limp figure straightened itself with a little jerk. "The washing and ironing, sweeping and cleaning, of course. And I did have one girl—she was a treasure in some respects—who always made my bed and the children's and tidied the rooms."

"Why didn't she stay with you, ma'am?"

Mrs. de Puyster-Jones looked offended. "I don't think that is a proper question for you to ask. I am very particular about impertinence, Annie. That you must understand from the very start with me. I never permit it in my house—never! Gretchen would have been simply perfect if she had not been so impertinent and if she had been fond of children. Are you fond of children?"

"I don't know any children, ma'am."

"Don't know any children! What an idea! You must know some. Well, I have two children and I require my servant to be polite and respectful to them. Of course, children will be children, but if one is fond of them one doesn't mind that. You look good-natured, I'm sure—and, yes—clean. Mr. Jones is very particular about the way a girl looks. He really can't eat unless everything is just so. Have you ever worn a cap?"

"I've never worked out, ma'am."

"You haven't? Dear! Dear! Well, perhaps it will be just as well. You'll learn my ways all the easier—if I decide to keep you. Now, if you'll come upstairs and change your dress, I think you can wash up the dishes and scrub the kitchen—be sure you don't forget the tables—before it is time to get dinner. We have dinner at six, and Mr. Jones wants it on time. He is very particular about that. Oh, I forgot to ask how old you are."

"I'm twenty-seven, ma'am."

"Well, I declare; I shouldn't have said so old. Have you any followers? I'm very particular about followers."

"Do you mean beaux, ma'am? No, I haven't one."

"I'm thankful to hear that; I don't permit followers. You never can tell but what they may be burglars. I always feel uneasy if there is a man in the kitchen. But at your age you probably won't have any. Now, we'll go right upstairs."

Mrs. Jones led the way—her progress being somewhat delayed by copious explanatory notes. "These stairs are shamefully dirty; in fact the house hasn't seen a broom for over a week. My health is delicate—very delicate. I'm almost a nervous wreck, the doctor tells me, and of course when I'm out of a girl I don't pretend to keep the work up. But you can get up early tomorrow morning and clean up the worst of it before breakfast, can't you? I do hope you are the kind that wakes up without being called. Besides, the alarm-clock is broken. I do believe I've bought two dozen alarm-clocks if I've bought one; but my girls have been so fearfully careless, dropping them about as if they were five-cent pans."

The lady of the house paused breathless at the foot of the second flight. "Stairs almost kill me," she observed plaintively; "I never come up here if I can help it; the stairs are so steep and my heart is weak; I'm subject to faint spells. I do hope I can get rested up a little now. Dear! dear!" she

DUNLOP
DETACHABLE

To take the new "Dunlop" off the rim (the new rim) loosen one screw only—and off it comes. And the rim can be fitted to a wood wheel as easily as an iron tire, for the wheelmaker has only to deal with flat surfaces. Let us send you description.

HARTFORD
CLINCHER

Made under the G. & J. patents (and therefore of a construction long since past the experimental stage), with greatly improved features, affording its user the minimum of trouble, maximum of safety, and long honest service.

MADE BY

THE HARTFORD RUBBER WORKS CO., HARTFORD, CONN., U.S.A.

A QUEENLY RED ROSE
"Magnafrano"

Fairly entitled to be called
THE EVER-BLOOMING "JACK" ROSE

A queenly variety, hardy and ever blooming. An American seedling, a cross between Magna Charta and Safrano, combines the hardiness and vigor of the former with the ever-blooming qualities of the latter. It has the delightful fragrance of the Tea Roses. Exceptionally healthy. Fine, bushy habit; the ideal hardy ever-blooming Rose for American gardens. The flowers are produced in lavish profusion, every new shoot bearing magnificent blossoms 4 to 5 inches across, of fine form, full and double. Color, clear, deep rosy-red. Buds long and pointed.

Price, strong plants to bloom this season, free by mail, 20c. each, 3 for 50c., 6 for $1.00.

A TWENTY-CENT BOOK FREE

Our 5th annual catalogue of "Everything for the Garden" (value 20c.) will be sent free to purchasers naming this magazine. This grand publication, the recognized standard on matters horticultural and agricultural, is invaluable to those who garden or farm.

Peter Henderson & Co.
35 & 37 CORTLANDT ST., NEW YORK.

MISS LIPPINCOTT'S
Flower Seeds

Send me Four two-cent Stamps, the names and full addresses of two of your flower-loving friends and I will mail you Four Easily Grown and Popular Annuals (25 cents value).

ASTERS—Finest mixed. Of all best varieties.
NASTURTIUMS—Over 20 famous varieties.
ROYAL SHOW PANSIES—Over 100 colors.
SWEET PEAS—Over 50 choice varieties.

One package of each variety, my book "Floral Culture," and my 12th annual catalogue, daintier and prettier than ever, sent for ONLY 6 CENTS and the names and addresses of two flower-loving friends. You won't forget if you write NOW.

Miss C. H. Lippincott, Minneapolis, Minn.

16 D. & C. Roses

16 superb, strong, hardy plants—on their own roots. No two alike—the best selection from a thousand varieties. Properly labeled and sent by mail, postpaid, anywhere in the United States for $1.00. Orders looked for delivery when directed. We make this inducement to further spread the fame of D. & C. roses. The collection includes two great Roses, Philadelphia Rambler and that great Rose, Grotto de St. Germain. All will bloom this season. Satisfaction and safe arrival guaranteed. Mention this magazine and we will send a return check for 25c. which we will accept as cash on a future order. Free with every order and also to all who will write for it, our New Guide to Rose Culture for 1904.

THE DINGEE & CONARD CO.
West Grove, Pa.
70 Greenhouses.
Est. 1890

$1.00

$87.75 Buys a $150 Union Stanhope with 78 in. Rubber Tires. Great Factory Sale

This job has fine all-wood trimming, oil burning lamp, grain leather padded dash, Bradley shaft coupler. This is a genuine Union Stanhope, thoroughly made and beautifully finished and is an unheard-of bargain. If desired, we ship it subject to examination and allow 30 Days Free Trial. We guarantee satisfaction. We make 130 other styles, from $25.00 to $150.00. Harness $2.00 to $20.00. Write today for our 100-page illustrated free catalog and special offer.

Union Buggy Company, P12, 402 Saginaw St., Pontiac, Mich.

$500 GIVEN AWAY

Write us or call on an ALABASTINE dealer for the easy conditions of a contest open to all. ALABASTINE is a SANITARY wall coating. Anyone can apply it. Not a disease-breeding out-of-date hot water glue kalsomine. Sample card free.

ALABASTINE CO., Grand Rapids, Mich.
or 105 Water St., New York City

Mention this Magazine.

LE PAGE'S MUCILAGE

No gumming to clog neck of bottle—No sediment—will not spoil nor discolor the finest papers. Full 8-ounce bottle, 50c.; also half-pints, pints and quarts.

Russell Cement Co., Gloucester, Mass.
LE PAGE'S PHOTO PASTE and
LE PAGE'S GLUE—Strongest in the World.

To Owners of Gasoline Engines
Automobiles, Launches, Etc.
The Auto-Sparker

does away entirely with all starting and running batteries, their annoyance and expense. No belt—no switch—no batteries. Can be attached to any engine now using batteries. Fully guaranteed; write for descriptive catalog.

MOTSINGER DEVICE MFG. CO.
15 Main Street, Pendleton, Ind.

O'Sullivan Rubber Heels are now described as the missing link between wings and shoes. Their buoyancy is due to the elasticity of new rubber. 35 cents, and small sum for attaching. Buy of your dealer, or O'SULLIVAN RUBBER CO., LOWELL, MASS.

Protected MONEY with Good Interest

This bank has depositors in 48 out of the 51 States and Territories—in Hawaii, the Philippines, Porto Rico, Cuba, Mexico, Canada and 5 European countries.

BANKING BY MAIL

is a very simple matter—and Perfectly Safe

Write for the Booklet.

The Union Savings Bank

CAPITAL $1,000,000.00

Frick Building, Station 1 Pittsburgh, Pa.

It's the Flat-Ended Teeth

with circular biting edges, that smooth out rough skin, remove dust caps, cleanse the skin in the bath, open the pores, and give new life to the whole body.

Bailey's Rubber Brushes

are all made this way. It's the right way. Millions in use. Bailey's name on every brush.

Accept no others. Beware of imitations.

Bailey's Rubber Complexion Brush	50
Bailey's Complexion Soap	10
Bailey's Bath and Shampoo Brush	75
Bailey's Rubber Bath and Flesh Brush	1.50
Bailey's Rubber Toilet Brush (large)	50
Bailey's Rubber Toilet Brush (small)	25
Bailey's Rubber Glove Cleaner	10

PAT. APPLIED FOR BAILEY'S RUBBER TOOTH BRUSH.

Clean the teeth perfectly and polishes the enamel without injury. Never irritates the gums. Can be used with any tooth wash or powder. Ideal for children's use. No bristles to come out. No 1, 25c; No 2, 35c. Mailed on receipt of price. At dealers or send on receipt of price. Advs. sold.

C. J. Bailey & Co., 22 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.

Army & Navy Liquid Glue

to broken bric-à-brac. Not a fish glue, but made from pure hide and sinews. Far superior to any other glue or cement for mending glass, china, wood, leather, etc.

Glues everything glueable. If your dealer hasn't it, send 5 cents for sample tube.

Wachter Mfg. Co.
509 West Pratt Street, Baltimore, Md.

added fretfully, "how this attic does look. The children have been playing here and they've pulled everything about. There, this is your room."

The low-browed door at the left yielded under the lady's touch, and the two entered. The one window was tightly closed. Anne opened it without apology or delay. "It does smell a little close," observed Mrs. Jones, glancing about the apartment with a shrug and a shiver. "But there's no heat up here. I declare I told Mary she must clean her room before she left, and she said she had. But the creature never told the truth if she could tell a lie. I'm really sorry it looks so. You can tidy it up some time to-morrow. I should have come up myself if I hadn't been so exhausted."

Anne's dismayed eyes glanced from the weakly apologetic smile on the woman's face to the rickety bedstead with its lumpy straw mattress protruding through the soiled and ragged sheet. A tangle of frowsy bedclothes trailed on the floor, which in its turn exhibited a motley array of crumpled ribbons, rusty hairpins, burnt matches, empty bottles, a pair of shapeless shoes, and divers toilet receptacles taxed to their uttermost capacity. "Do you—expect me to—sleep in this room?" she asked in a low voice.

Mrs. de Puyster-Jones apparently did not hear the question. "Jam!" she exclaimed in a heart-breaking whisper. "My best raspberry jam! I thought it had gone fast. Did you ever!" The lady was pointing with a fine dramatic gesture to a plate and knife daubed with some reddish substance which had been thoughtlessly added to the collection under the bed.

"I do hope you're honest," she added, turning severely upon Anne. "Think of that wicked, wicked girl eating my best raspberry jam in this room!"

"I don't see how she could do it," murmured Anne, a wicked twinkle in her gray eyes.

"No, nor I," pursued Mrs. Jones with a sudden change of tone. "And that reminds me—are you a Catholic?"

"No, ma'am; I'm an Episcopalian."

"An Episcopalian! Well, I declare! I don't know as I've ever had an Episcopal girl. I had one Methodist, but my, what a temper she had! Actually the creature told me she would pray for me. And that same day she had the impertinence to slap Ethel's ears in the kitchen. Of course, I sent her flying that very night. At any rate, I'm glad you're not a Catholic—though, if you insist on going to church, early mass is convenient. Mary used to go and be back before we were up on Sunday morning. Do you go to church?"

"Sometimes," said Anne doubtfully.

"Well, I hope you're not too rigid about it, because we have a good deal of company on Sunday—friends from the city, you know. We always lived in the city till a few years ago; then Ethel was so delicate that we moved out here. Now I guess I'll go down. Change your dress as quick as you can. You've a working-dress in your bundle, I suppose. By the way, did you send your trunk here?"

"No, ma'am; I thought—"

"You thought you'd see how you liked me, I suppose. Actually one girl told me that right out. The impertinence of it! Well, I'll tell you one thing: if you do what's right you'll get along nicely with me. I'm not a bit hard on a girl. In fact I'm very considerate—too considerate, Algy—I mean Mr. Jones—says. Mr. Jones believes in being right up and down about everything. But that's the way with business men. Now, come down as soon as you possibly can and I'll tell you about dinner."

At eleven o'clock that night Anne Smith inscribed the following brief sentences in her notebook: "Why does the American woman of the laboring class decline to enter domestic service? Can the answer to this question be sought in the person of the American mistress?"

This done she lay down on the rickety bedstead with an air of grim determination. "The sense of smell is the most spiritual of all the senses," she quoted as she put out the light. "I will now concentrate on the tip of my nose and produce the odor of violets."

(TO BE CONTINUED)

WAKE UP

Wake Up

TO THE fact that the peculiar, indescribable enjoyment known only to a perfectly satisfied smoker is within your reach; to the fact that after you have looked us over a little bit and located in our unlimited line the cigar that just fits your case, there is no more shopping necessary; to the fact that the cigar with your exact degree of aroma, taste and appearance will be brought to you as you say, all transportation charges paid, affording you at all times a perfect and precise degree of uniformity.

As every smoker knows, there is nothing that is quite so congenial to the cigar which affords him the exact enjoyment which he seeks in buying his cigars.

The enjoyment and this uniformity cannot be given him by any dealer who does not control his product and who cannot have in mind and close personal touch all the time the personal preferences of each of his customers.

Our variety is so great that we cover all the points and guarantee to furnish this exact right article in our line. Our factory, of which we invite inspection, is a model of sanitary cleanliness and no dopes, drugs, nor flavoring allowed within its walls. Each brand is made by the same expert workman in the same way all the time. Clean, pure, imported Havana is used in the making of every cigar costing you over $1.00 per hundred.

Make up your order to-day as any delay is an injustice to your pocket book and your perfect enjoyment.

For 7c we will gladly send you an assortment of 12 cigars showing four varieties of 10c and two for a quarter value; or for 50c an equal showing of High Grade 5c and 10c values.

All transportation charges paid in advance by us. Let us send you our illustrated booklet, "Rolled Reverses."

Wake Up

TO THE modern, up-to-date method of business; to the fact that it is wholly unnecessary, after a clear is produced for you to pay the manufacturer's salesman his 25, the jobber his 10, the retailer his 25, all making a total of 50%, which comes directly from your own pocket with every cigar you buy in the old way.

We have eliminated entirely all of the in-between profits and expenses and find it to our advantage, as well as to yours, to sell our entire product.

Direct to the Consumer with nothing added to the cost of production but the single factory outlay.

Thus, without taking an iota from the quality of our goods, we can guarantee you our quality and

A Saving of 50 per cent.

Our guarantee is broader than that—we say that if, for any cause whatever, any cigars are unsatisfactory which we may ever ship you, you are entitled to and will cheerfully receive for the full purchase price, regardless of how many cigars you have smoked to find out that they did not suit you.

Your Money Back

Thousands upon thousands of customers are using the brands we list here and find them exactly right.

Make up your order now.

Picnic 4 1/2 in.	Conchas, $1.00 $1.75
Balmotto, 4 1/2 in.	Furianos, 90 1.65 $2.25
El Provet, 4 1/2 in.	Perfection, 85 1.50 3.00
La Medalla, 4 1/2 in.	Conchas, 70 1.35 2.80
Federa, 4 1/2 in.	Londres, 66 2.60

PHILA., PA.
"Both the El Provet and the La Medalla are fine. But much cannot be said in their favor."
JAMES A. MONTEITH.

DON'T FORGET TO ORDER AT ONCE. WRITE TO-DAY TO

JOHN B. ROGERS & CO., The Pioneers, 40 Jarvis Street BINGHAMTON, N.Y.

The American Boy

Biggest, Brightest, Best Boy's Paper in the World.

Trial 3 months for 10c. Regular $1.00 a year.

Clear, inspiring stories, games, sports, stamps, Photography, Science, Puzzles, Debating, How to Make Things, etc. Intensely practical. 100 pages a month—48 pages a year. Boys are enthusiastic over it. You will approve it. Address

THE SPRAGUE PUBLISHING COMPANY
346 Majestic Bldg., Detroit, Michigan.

TRY AN IDEAL

J. W. Miller's Incubator—made by the man who knows. It is really self-regulating.

30 Days Free Trial

We get no money until you are perfectly satisfied. Poultry Book Free.

J. W. MILLER CO.
Box 54 Freeport, Ill.

(Poultry supplies and thoroughbred fowls)

I Print

My Own Circulars, Cards, &c.

$5 PRESS

Saves money. Big profit printing for others. Large press for book, brochure, etc. Full instruction sent for me. Write for catalogues, prices, type, etc. to factory.

THE PRESS CO., Meriden, Conn.

WANTED—Young Men to Prepare for GOOD PAY AND CHANCE TO BECOME AN ENGINEER. Address

Railway Association, Box 47, Brooklyn, N. Y.

WORLD'S FAIR SAINT LOUIS

A Revelation

In size, magnificence and beauty, the St. Louis World's Fair will surpass any previous Exposition. To see it as it will be, get the Katy Album. Views of all principal buildings reproduced in colors in the lithographer's highest art. The leaves, 6 x 9 in. are loosely bound and may be framed. Send 25c to

"Katy," Box T 911, St. Louis, Mo.

THE KATY FLYER, the crack train of the M. & T. Ry.—between St. Louis, Oklahoma, Texas and Old Mexico.

Saving Shaving—

You not only save money by shaving yourself with the always ready and smooth working

Gillette Safety Razor

But you save no end of annoyance and bother. No stopping, polishing, no danger of cuts—no lost time or health risks in barber shops. Each razor has 20 double-edged blades—is good for 400 shaves. We rehone the twenty for 50 cents. If not satisfied after trial, money refunded. If not at your dealer's write for booklet. Correspondence solicited from dealers. Exclusive territory will be given.

GILLETTE SALES CO., 1206 Manhattan Building, CHICAGO

MAKE YOUR MONEY WORK for YOU

It's a good thing to save. It's better to save and have your savings work while you save. Every dollar deposited in

THE Keystone Bank OF PITTSBURGH

Earns 4% Compounded every 6 months

Banking by mail has become a science in this bank. It is a substantial part of our business because of the unusual facilities we offer to depositors in any part of the country. Absolute security assured by $4,000,000 resources, not a penny of which is invested in stocks or bonds. Write for booklet "Saving Money," which explains our saving by mail system.

The Keystone Bank of Pittsburgh
Pittsburgh, Pa.

The SMITH PREMIER

TYPEWRITER

LIKE RADIIUM IS INCOMPARABLE BOTH IN ENDURANCE & ACHIEVEMENT

Send for booklet which explains why.

The Smith Premier Typewriter Co.

Executive Office: 287 Broadway, New York. Factory: Syracuse, N. Y.

BRANCHES IN ALL LARGE CITIES

COMPOSITION OF THE POTATO
Pat. . . . .	1%	Protein . . . . .	2.25%
Crude fibre . . . . .	1%	Ash . . . . .	1.5%
		Water . . . . .	78.35%

Practical Lessons in Home Making

COURSES BY CORRESPONDENCE IN

- "Chemistry of the Household"
- "Household Bacteriology"
- "Food and Dietetics"
- "Scientific Principles of Cookery"
- "Household Management and Accounts"
- "Home Sanitation"
- "The House, its Plan, Decoration and Care"
- "Home Care of the Sick"
- "Study of Child Life"
- "Care of Children"
- "Textiles and Clothing"

THE LESSON PAPERS have been prepared by leading authorities in Household Economics.

THE INSTRUCTION is under the direction of the Professors and Teachers who have prepared the Lesson Papers.

The aim of the instruction is to reduce the traditions of home management to simple, practical, and sound principles, to classify and systematize knowledge based on scientific research.

Illustrated announcement giving full synopses of all subjects sent free upon request.

American School of Household Economics
3333A Armour Avenue CHICAGO, ILL.

GREIDER'S FINE CATALOGUE of Standard bred poultry for 1904, printed in colors, the chrome, suitable for framing, illustrates and describes 60 varieties. Gives reasonable prices for stock and eggs, tells all about poultry, their diseases, etc.

This book only 10 cents.

B. H. GREIDER, RHEIMS, PA.

Where the Money Came From

(Continued from Page 9)

power. The father had been given vastly the better mental endowment. Yet, where he had thought in hundreds of miles, within ten years the son was thinking in thousands. The "Vanderbilt System" was mapping itself out in his brain long before it was mapping itself half across the continent. He seemed first mentally to assimilate a new road, then to buy or build it. He had fully philosophized it, knew all its peculiarities, what it ought to do and how best to make it do it. He had not been a year at the head of affairs before he had acquired the Canada Southern. In another year he had added the Michigan Central. Each alone was of almost as great a mileage as the Commodore had managed singly at any time in his life. A year later he had taken over the Michigan Southern. Emerging triumphant from the great westbound freight war with the Erie, he bought the Nickel Plate, and had still another route to Chicago. Ohio and Indiana he covered with the Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati and Indianapolis. He moved south along the Mississippi Valley with the New York, Chicago and St. Louis. He went into the wheat country with the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Cleveland. He did not speculate, but he got control of the Chicago and Northwestern with a suddenness that bereft the speculating Gould of several millions. And he gave that financier another frightful wrench when he made himself master of the Philadelphia and Reading. In the mean time a dozen smaller roads had been welded into the "System." He got the open door into every great agricultural and manufacturing region in the North and Middle West. Always, too, he was focusing traffic upon New York. The West Shore, the alternative route down the Hudson Valley, became a part of his "System" only a week before his death.

Yet again there impelled him no hunger for possession, no grandiose and irresponsible megalomania. Before it was added, each new road had become a necessity. Every link left open reached out to lock itself to another. And, above all, the second Vanderbilt still "wanted to see things taken hold of and properly managed."

Not that he was any altruist, however. He was absolutely hard-headed, the business man in the most uncompromising sense of the word. On the day when he came into possession of the four thousand miles of the Chicago and Northwestern, it is said that he found himself taking luncheon beside one of his checking clerks. On both their bills was a like overcharge. The clerk, with magnanimity, could not bring himself to speak of the trifle. Vanderbilt called the waiter's attention to the imposition very pointedly. To the clerk he observed with politeness: "No doubt you can afford it."

In the early eighties he made the first experiment of a really fast train to Chicago. It was found to be running at a loss. Vanderbilt gave notice that he was going to take it off again. He was interviewed upon the subject. "But the public find it very convenient and useful," argued the reporter. "You ought to accommodate them."

"The public!" said Mr. Vanderbilt. "If they want it why don't they patronize it and make it pay? That's the only test I have as to whether a line is wanted or not—does it pay? If it doesn't pay I suppose it isn't wanted."

"Are you working," persisted the reporter, "for the public or for your stockholders?"

"The public be d—d!" said Mr. Vanderbilt. "I am working for my stockholders! If the public want the train why don't they support it?"

It is not pleasant language, but it is the universal expression of the business attitude. And as long as the American people elect to have great public utilities managed for any one individual or group of stockholders it is the natural and inevitable attitude.

In another and a very real way he did show regard for the public interest. With his father's fortune there had come to him the bulk of the stock of the New York Central, four hundred thousand shares in all, representing fifty-two millions of dollars. And, as he reasoned, if anything should happen to him there might follow general panic and loss; it was too great a consideration to hinge

No matter if your honeymoon did occur ten, twenty or even thirty years ago. Take another; you will enjoy it more than the first one if you spend it in California—especially if you go via the

Golden State Limited

Leaves Chicago and Kansas City daily, until April 14, for Los Angeles, Santa Barbara and San Francisco. Southern Route—by way of El Paso and the Southern Pacific—through a land where winter is unknown.

Fast as the fastest. Finer than the finest. Tickets, berths and literature at this office and at offices of all connecting lines.

JNO. SEBASTIAN,
Passenger Traffic Manager,
Chicago, Ill.

GET THE BEST

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY

English Biography Geography Fiction, Etc.

25,000 NEW WORDS, Etc.
New Gazetteer of the World
With over 25,000 entries based on the latest census.

New Biographical Dictionary
With over 10,000 names of noted persons, birth, death, etc.
Edited by W. T. HARRIS, Ph.D., LL.D.,
United States Commissioner of Education.

New Plates. 2380 Quarto Pages.
Rich Bindings. 5000 Illustrations.

Should be in Every Home, School and Office

Also Webster's Collegiate Dictionary with 1100 pages, 1400 illustrations. Size 7-10-2 1/2 in.

A Special Thin Paper Edition
Just issued, printed from same plates as regular edition. It has limp covers and round corners. Size 5 1/2 x 8 1/2 x 1 1/2 in.

FREE, "A Test in Pronunciation"
Instructive and entertaining. Also illustrated pamphlets.

G. & C. MERRIAM CO.,
Publishers, Springfield, Mass.

DON'T SHOUT!

The "Morley"

makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. A miniature Telephone for the Ear—invisible, easily adjusted, and entirely comfortable. Over fifty thousand sold, giving instant relief from deafness and head noises. No case of deafness that cannot be benefited.

Write for booklet and testimonials.

The Morley Company, Dept. T,
19 South 10th Street, Philadelphia

HOW TO SECURE Music Lessons Free

at your home. For a limited time we will give for advertising purposes, 48 music lessons on either Piano, Organ, Banjo, Guitar, Cornet, Violin, or Mandolin, your expense will only be the cost of the lesson. Write for booklet and testimonials. Hundreds write: "Wish I had known of your school before." Any instrument supplied, cash or credit. For booklet, testimonials and FREE tuition contract, address:

U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC, BOX 753, 19 UNION SQUARE, NEW YORK, N. Y.

Remington

Every Remington Typewriter Lasts.

Therefore Remington Supremacy Lasts.

Remington Typewriter Co.
327 Broadway, New York

WHAT IS YOUR SALARY?

Why not increase it as hundreds of successful graduates have done? We teach ADVERTISING by mail. Show you how to develop your own business or fit you for good positions. The demand for competent advertising men exceeds the supply. Don't waste your time—pay a little more and get the best.

FREE—Our Third Annual Announcement tells you how to learn this at home. Postal will bring it. Chicago College of Advertising, 501 Williams Bldg., Cor. Fifth Ave. and Monroe St., Chicago

CARICATURE. We teach CARICATURE drawing by the LATEST and BEST MAIL SYSTEM. LEARN TO DRAW. It is a profession that offers an opportunity with pecuniary profits. For terms, etc., address:

THE EMPIRE SCHOOL OF CARICATURE,
No. 203 West 139th St., NEW YORK CITY.

Apprentice Electrician to Superintendent through the I. C. S.

When I took up the I. C. S. training in electrical engineering I was an apprentice in an electrical instrument-making establishment. As I proceeded with my studies, I advanced in my work and soon raised myself to be instrument maker. Later, I accepted a better paying position as a designer of arc lamps. Here I advanced very rapidly and was soon put in charge of the testing room. I left this place to accept a position as electrician with the Long Island Railroad's trolley line at Rockaway Beach, and a month later was placed in charge. My salary is now seven times as much as when I enrolled.

ROBERT W. BRODMAN,
22 Second Avenue, College Point, N. Y.

Our courses are inexpensive—from $10 up. No books or extras to buy. The booklet "1001 Stories of Success" gives a thousand and one examples of how our training has enabled our students to advance from low positions to higher ones. This booklet will be sent free to all who fill in and mail to us this coupon, and at the same time we will tell you how to qualify for the position and salary you want.

International Correspondence Schools
Box 1171, SCRANTON, PA.

Please send me your booklet, "1001 Stories of Success," and explain how I can qualify for the position before which I have marked X.

Mech. Engineer	Orn. Designer
Draftsman	Navigator
Electrician	Bookkeeper
Telephone Engineer	Stenographer
Steam Engineer	Show Card Writer
Marine Engineer	Ad. Writer
Civil Engineer	Window Dresser
Surveyor	Teacher
Mining Engineer	Languages with
Architect	Edison Phonograph
Textile Expert	Commercial Law
Metallurgist	Plumbing
Chemist	Steam Heating
Illustrator

Name _____
Street and No. _____
City _____ State _____

The "Lundstrom" Sectional Bookcase

Pronounced the best by thousands of users. Highly finished in solid Golden Oak. Price per section, with door, $1.75; without door, $1.00. Sent on approval, freight prepaid, direct from factory. Send for Catalogue No. 25.

The C. J. Lundstrom Co.
Little Falls, N. Y.
Formerly The Standard Mfg. Co.

TELEGRAPHY

quickly taught. Graduates helped to positions. Established 32 years. Send for illustrated catalog. VALENTINE'S SCHOOL OF TELEGRAPHY, Janesville, Wis.

upon any one life. In 1879 he sold two hundred and fifty thousand shares of it to a banking and broking syndicate, by whom it was gradually put upon the market. And to do that he had to sell it at a good ten points below its market value.

The "System" was earning him millions of money. In the seven years of his activity he had made twice what his father made in seventy. Yet he seemed always to look upon his fortune as a trust in the old and worthy sense of the word. He kept a margin of more than forty millions of ready money—most of it in Government bonds—and, in the words of Russell Sage, "being quite accustomed to handle such sums, he could accomplish almost any effect he chose." Yet his proudest business boast was that he was no Wall Street man. "I buy, but I don't sell," he used to say. He never did anything on less than a twenty per cent. margin, and he never "sold short" at all.

He was the guardian of manifold interests. It has been said that he did the actual work of twenty men. He took the responsibility of a thousand. Between the two he worked himself to death. In all his instincts he was domestic; he loved his children intensely. Yet for months he was under a concentration of labor in which he forgot their names, even as the old, unmarrying Commodore had done. But it is certainly true that the man was not working for his own pleasure. For the most part we labor on this earth with as blind an instinct as that which sends us to our food and bed; but no less instinctively we seek to make our work our happiness. The control of every mile of railroad upon earth could not have given the second Vanderbilt the kind of happiness he wanted. He was always wistfully sighing for his Staten Island farm. His face was not more reminiscent of some great English squire than were all his natural sympathies. He liked dogs, cattle, the smell of fresh earth. He loved a fast trotter better than a thousand fast trains. When he could get an afternoon off he used to "go up the road," which signifies the old Harlem Lane above McComb's Dam, the unofficial Speedway of those days. And there he drove his spider-wheeled top wagon at a clip which, when it was ended by his death, plunged all the roadhouses in tears from Delaney's place to Johnny Barry's.

One day, when driving Lady Mac at a 2:20 gait, he was pitched out on his head. "Is the mare hurt?" he gasped when they brought him back to consciousness. The fierce joy the Commodore used to get from his bloodthirsty corners had been replaced in the son by something kinder and more sportsmanlike. For the duel to the death with bowies had been substituted the exhibition bout with foils.

He had finer tastes than those of the stable, too. Travel had more than common allurements for him. But very rarely could he get nearer it than a run across the Atlantic and the voyage back in the same steamer. His love of pictures, too, had grown steadily. And, as the present gallery in the New York Museum of Art should prove, it was the crassest stupidity on the part of the cartoonists which represented him as buying by the yard or by the dozen. "It may be a very fine picture," he was wont to say to his adviser, Mr. Avery; "but until I can appreciate its beauty I shall not buy it." Troyon was attacked by the critics for the attitude of some of his oxen as they turned to leave the field. Vanderbilt came earnestly to his support. "I have seen the same thing on my own farm a hundred times," he said. The Sower, perhaps his greatest picture, was acquired when Millet was only beginning to be recognized. Its buyer was attracted by the great, vigorous truth of the man's poise and gesture. It is not wholly artistic criticism, but it is wholly honest. And it made his gallery infinitely the best collection of modern paintings in America.

He had been trained to look at life from the business standpoint. Undoubtedly he felt that, because he had earned his money, it belonged to him. Yet, on the other hand, next to the old sharp fence-rail joke, he enjoyed giving a timid artist twice what he had asked for a picture. In his actual charities, though, he was always rather sly and underhand. At his death it was found that he had been carrying along a ragged brigade of pensioners whom no one had ever heard of before.

The story that will best show the kind of man he was is the story of his business relations with General and Mrs. Grant. But it is something to be touched upon very glancingly and tenderly. The old hero, used simply as a cat's-paw by a rascally partner, came to Vanderbilt to ask the loan

Vose Pianos

Established in 1851

They occupy an unassailable position among the pianos of the world because

They Excel in Artistic Quality

and in exclusive features that give distinctiveness and value.

By our easy payment plan, every family in moderate circumstances can own a VOSE piano. We allow a liberal price for old instruments in exchange, and deliver the piano in your house free of expense. You can deal with us at a distant point the same as in Boston.

Send for catalogue and full information.

VOSE & SONS PIANO CO.
161 BOYLSTON STREET - BOSTON

Engraved Wedding Invitations Marriage
Announcements
Church, At Home
and Calling Cards

Quality and workmanship
the best in fashion's latest approved styles.

Social Correspondence Papers

No matter what the importance of the letter you write may be, use the best paper. Select the finish that appeals to you most, and use it always. Let it become part of your individuality, for in no other way is the refinement of men and women more clearly indicated than by the paper on which you write.

An Added Dignity if Die Stamped

All that is exclusive and best at

HOSKINS

Social Engineers and Stationers
904-906 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
A Request will Bring Samples

Rip Van Winkle Spring Bed

An all metal spring—absolutely sanitary. Will not sag in the middle or wear out. Makes you sleep comfortable, healthful and restful. Consequently, you are cheerful all day.

Furniture dealers sell Rip Van Winkle Spring Beds bearing our trademark. If yours does not, send us his name and we will send you a copy of Irving's story of Rip Van Winkle, also a booklet on Spring Beds.

WRITE TODAY

National Spring Bed Co.
26 High St., New Britain, Conn.

SQUABS

sell for $2.50 to $5.00 a doz.; hotels and restaurants charge 75 cents to $1.50 an order (serving one squab). There is good money breeding them; a flock makes country life pay handsomely. Squabs are raised in ONE MONTH; a woman can do all the work. No mixing feed, no night labor, no young stock to attend (parent birds do this). Send for our FREE BOOK, "How to Make Money with Squabs," and learn this rich industry. Plymouth Rock Squab Company, 2 A Friend Street, Boston, Mass.

Makes shoes wear longer

Send 10 Cents

and the name of your dealer, if he doesn't sell Oilycream, and we will send you by return mail a Full Size

25-cent

Package, Postpaid

Only one package will be sent to each person, and this offer only holds good until April 1, 1901. Send today before it's too late.

WHITTEMORE'S

OILYCREAM

tube contains enough for about 100 shines, and the polish is so durable that one or two applications a week will be sufficient. It does not look or feel stiff, and can be carried in your trunk, bag, or pocket without danger of soiling. A felt shaver and wooden polishing cloth making a complete polishing outfit, in every 25c box.

Ask your dealer for it

WHITTEMORE BROS. & CO.
Dept. P Cambridge, Mass.

Deerfield Water

Pure, natural water is good medicine. That is why

Deerfield Water

is salubrious. It mixes deliciously because it contains no artificial salts or chemicals and is soft, sweet and non-destructible.

Write for booklet to

The Deerfield Water Company
Deerfield, Ohio

FOR YOU THESE TWO BOOKS

With Our Compliments

The facts are, it is impossible for us to give full information concerning our Institution by letter. It must be done by printed books. That is the reason we are willing to distribute the books mentioned above among proprietors, managers, salesmen and prospective salesmen. We want you to know all about the

Sheldon School of Scientific Salesmanship.

You are welcome to these two books, if you are engaged in commercial or professional life in any capacity. It is entirely within your power to make a careful reading of them, worth thousands of dollars to you. You may be gratified with present success but you are not satisfied. You want to make more money and these two books will show you how to do it. They will tell you much about the SCIENCE OF SALESMANSHIP which underlies the art of selling all things. As soon as we receive your postal card or letter, asking for them, these two books will go forward to you, postage prepaid. Address

The S. S. of S. S., 951 McClurg Bldg., Chicago

The Value of A Thorough Knowledge of Advertising

If you appreciate the fact that the demand for competent men and women advertisers is increasing; if you are contemplating the study of advertising—

Then my proposition will interest you.

My graduates are well-equipped. They obtain and hold good positions. They are sought for. One large employer of advertisers—the head of a syndicate of forty retail stores, has accepted four of my graduates—one at $50 a week. This man writes to me: "Mr. Helms, I will take ten more men of the same kind as you have sent me."

My graduates are in remunerative positions in every part of this country and Canada. Just a couple of examples:

ELMER HELMS, formerly advertiser for John Wanamaker—the instructor who gives personal attention to every lesson of every pupil.

S. D. VAN CAMPEN, Adv. Mgr. W. D. Ackerson Co., Newton, N. J., says: "As I have just had a promotion in this firm, both in position and salary, I feel that I should let you know about it. The greater part of the credit for my success in the past year is due you."

CHARLES B. THORNBURG, Advertising Manager, Moscor Mercantile Co., Moscow, Idaho, says: "I certainly am pleased with what you have done for me—both with the way in which you have fitted me to do good advertising and for the excellent position I obtained on your recommendation."

This is a correspondence course. But the instruction is personal—there's not a form letter among the forty or more that each pupil receives. Every pupil is instructed according to individual needs. Every letter is personally dictated by myself.

I will want about forty new pupils within the next six weeks, to take the place of those who will graduate during that time. I prefer earnest men and women—those who are willing to do some researching about the work presented to them in my printed matter and personal letters. If you are one of that kind, write to me and I'll tell you more about my methods for helping you to a much larger salary.

ELMER HELMS

Formerly advertiser for John Wanamaker
Room 93, 11 East 16th Street, New York

A gift which comes from afar, carries a peculiar charm. It is doubly appreciated. Order a box of our famous chocolates by mail. The assortment consists of chocolate dipped fruits and nut meats such as pineapple, cherries, ginger, roasted almonds and filberts. Rich cream center chocolates, flavored with the real juice of orange, lemon, raspberry, strawberry and pineapple. Some are flavored with genuine Vermont maple sugar and have English walnuts in the center.

These delicious chocolates are sealed in dainty boxes of exquisite design, practically air tight, dust and moisture proof. Each contains 60 pieces selected from 60 varieties. Sent anywhere, postpaid, on receipt of $1. Money back if not perfect. Nothing better at any price. Name on every piece. Liberal sample, postpaid, 10 cents.

WILFRID I. BOOTH, Elmira, N. Y.

ILLUSTRATING CARTOONING
LAW
PHARMACY
JOURNALISM

BANKING, BOOKKEEPING, STENOGRAPHY, MECHANICAL DRAWING, ADVERTISING, LETTER WRITING, PENMANSHIP—TAUGHT BY MAIL. Our plan quickest and cheapest. Students advance in position while learning. We send to graduates ROME SCHOLARSHIPS WITHOUT CASH. EASIEST TERMS. Original schools. Send today for club offer and free copy of "Profits of Knowing How." State course desired.
National Correspondence Schools, 24 Penn St., Indianapolis, U.S.A.

of $150,000 for one day. It was given him without question or security. The next morning the partner—one of those "young Napoleons of finance" whom we have always with us—announced the failure of the firm. Then began a pitiful attempt on the part of the General to repay the lender by deeding him all his personal property, his household effects, his gifts from all the world—even his swords and medals. Vanderbilt, wrung to the heart, would not hear of it for a moment, and cast about to see how he might save a pride so wretchedly smitten. But the ex-President would hear of no denial, and when refused again he turned his belongings over to his attorney with orders to sell them. Vanderbilt bid them in. And then, in the most sophistical of letters, he wrote Mrs. Grant gravely informing her that, as the debt had now been paid, he was therewith finally closing the matter by returning to her the deeds, mortgages and like unimportant papers; as for the personal treasures, if she would allow him, he should like to make a request as to their final disposal—"that at the General's death they should be forwarded to the Government at Washington, where they would remain as perpetual memorials of his fame and of the history of his time." By the oddest coincidence it was known that the above was the disposition which the Grants had intended to make of their treasures themselves.

And that specious epistle did all but deceive the good old lady. The General, however, would have none of it. Vanderbilt had to take other tactics; and, indeed, at a time when his health had broken down for good, he afflicted himself with more pains and worry to keep from taking that money back than ever he had to make a hundred times as much. He so managed it, too, that, although in the end it was a compromise, with only the Government the gainer, no man's pride was hurt. The multi-millionaire had acted very like a Chevalier Bayard.

Yet he did not belong to the philanthropic class, but frankly to a lower one. He was a worker, a builder—in no uncertain way a ruler. The first of the Vanderbilts had founded his empire as firmly as any one man can found an empire. Yet his death was followed by an anxiety that amounted to panic. In seven years more this second of the line had not only trebled the extent of that empire, but had so steadiest, unified and consolidated it that at his death there was no ruffle of disturbance. In the world of political empires it was as if Napoleon had, in 1814, been succeeded by an Augustus.

If simple in all his ways, too, William H. Vanderbilt plainly regarded himself as the second of a dynasty. With the 16,000-mile demesne of his railroad system he completely identified himself. His private secretary was also the treasurer of the New York Central. His regular morning talks with his two elder sons were upon the subject of railroad administration. The Commodore had chosen a single heir to succeed him. William H., while leaving to each of his children ten million dollars and a Fifth Avenue house, divided one hundred and fifty millions between Cornelius and William K. And with the former was placed the balance of wealth and responsibility. "If the Vanderbilt fortune is not held in common like the Rothschilds," says one of the family counselors, "it is under a system of control as a unit by the elder brothers." It was a kind of primogeniture invented by William H. In order that the consolidation of his "System" might be maintained, he consolidated the family.

But, in judging him, let us cast aside all talk of empires and of millions of dollars. Those things are what Carlyle has fittingly described as "clothes." "There be three things," says Bacon, "which make a nation great and prosperous: a fertile soil; busy workshops; and easy conveyance for man and goods from place to place." If the last of the three is not to be crossed out, the second Vanderbilt does not deserve ill from his country. In another land and with a different training he might have gained entrance to the earthly pantheon as a second-rate artist or, perhaps, even as a landscape gardener of the highest class. As it was, he was a toiler and won his place among the world's great artisans. If you say that he was working for himself—which is only a half truth—I must answer that the greatest of artists have worked only for themselves. If you say that they were glorified by the guiding light of inspiration I must answer that leading this man, so many times a millionaire, was something very like the divine light of duty.

The Prophylactic Family:
Tooth—Hair—Mail—Military Brushes
Always sold in a Yellow Box

The Prophylactic Hair Brush

No other brush made like it, or so good. Solid wood back, chemically treated; pure selected bristles triply secured in pure aluminum. Absolutely sanitary—no water or dirt can penetrate it—sterilized by boiling water without injury.

Made to Wear a Lifetime

The particular man always insists on his barber keeping one for his personal use.

Price $2.00 at all dealers, or sent by mail—postage free.

Send for Leaflets

FLORENCE MANUFACTURING CO.
32 Pine St., Florence, Mass.

"NEVERMYSS" FIRE EXTINGUISHER

is a dry powder extinguisher that never freezes, never out of order, but is always ready, and good for years. Does not need a mechanic to operate it; a child can use it. It has saved lots of property and is always needed in every building on the farm and in the towns. It is a booklet, and see what it has done for others. We want agents in every town, and we pay good commissions.

Price $3.00 each, sent by express, all charges prepaid.

Nevermyss Fire Extinguisher Co.
Drawer 0 Middletown, New York

SUPERIOR FENCES. We build strong, durable, wrought iron and wire fences to order for lawns, parks, farms, country estates, etc. 50 designs. Write for our illustrated catalogue.
Enterprise Foundry & Fence Co., 301 South Senate Ave., Indianapolis, Ind.

The "Little" Savings Bank

(Patented)

is a "little" first step to wealth and independence. A peculiar key perfectly secures its contents and it is quite a little "trick" to open it; size 2 x 3 x 4 inches. Sent prepaid on receipt of twenty cents, to any address.

C. W. LITTLE, Jeweler
74-76 Cortlandt Street, New York

U. S. A. LIQUID PISTOL

Will stop the most vicious dog (or man) without permanent injury. Perfectly safe to carry without danger of leakage. Fires and recharges by pulling the trigger. Loads from any liquid. No cartridges required. Over 10 shots in one loading. All dealers, or by mail, 80c.
Parker, Stearns & Sutton, 231 South St., New York, U. S. A.

SUCCESS SHORTHAND

Taught by mail under the direction of the most successful firm of shorthand reporters in the world. They teach you by mail the same system they use. Write to-day for our book "Success Shorthand System."

WALTON, JAMES & FORD
Suite 30 77-79 Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

ARE YOU SHORT?

Gilbert's Heel Cushions

"Worn inside the shoe."

Increase Height, Arch the Instep, Make Better Fitting Shoes, Remove Jar in Walking, Indolored by physicians. Simply placed in the heel, left down. Don't require larger shoes. 4 in., 2 1/2 in., 3 in., 3 1/2 in., 50c. per pair. At shoe and dept. stores. READ. Send name, size shoe, height desired, and 2c. stamp for pair on ten days trial.

GILBERT MFG. CO., 16 Elm St., Rochester, N. Y.

Wood's Fruit Specials

From my home grown stock of strong rooted, choice Fruit trees, 12 collections, covering all small fruits, prepaid at special prices. Choice groups of select plants for small gardens. Circular describes and gives prices. FREE. Catalogue also free.

Allen L. Wood, Wholesale Grower, Rochester, N. Y.

"How to Illustrate"

A SELF-INSTRUCTING BOOK

It is splendidly illustrated. The instruction is thorough, practical, complete, unalloyed. It is emphatically not a cut-price substitute for higher priced methods.

Written by Charles Hope Provost, artistic contributor to Life, Scribner's Monthly, Harper's Monthly, Harper's Weekly, Herald, World, Evening World, Evening Journal, Advertiser's Magazine, etc., teacher of 1,000 people by mail, originator of correspondence art instruction.

CONTENTS.

TECHNIC—Working with pen, brush (oil and water color), pastel, grease and conte crayon, lead pencil, carbon pencil, scratch paper, chalk plate, Ben Day machine, silver print work, etc. Also the various effects used by pen artists, including quick and slow lines, English and American styles of treating zig-zag lines, hooked lines, quick lines, double cross hatching, stippling, spatter work, etc. Wash drawings. Distemper drawings. Tracing and copying photographs. What materials to use, including papers, canvases, and Bristol boards. Tools and how to handle them. Drawing from nature. Drawing from memory, with table showing comparative measurements of different parts of the human body—head, hands, feet, legs, arms, etc. COLOR—primary and secondary colors, etc., explained. How to mix different shades, etc. ARTISTIC ANATOMY—The bones and muscles as applied to pictorial work. LETTERING—Copying and originating. Roman, block, old English, and script styles shown. Elementary, historic, and geometric ornament. Conventionalization of flowers, ornamental composition, pictorial composition. FACIAL EXPRESSION—Sorrow, joy, anger, fear, contempt, laughter. Aerial and linear perspective. BUSINESS DETAILS—How to sell pictures, how to get a position as an artist, prices and salaries paid, lists of names of publishers and others who buy work, how to pack pictures to send by mail or express, etc., etc. Explanations of various engraving and reproductive processes. "How to Illustrate" sent prepaid to any address in the world for $1.00. (4 Imp. Covers)

A more handsomely bound edition in stiff covers, $1.50 prepaid.

THE ART OF CARICATURE, a handy book (complete in itself on this subject) and containing specimens and explanations of all kinds of caricature from the simple work of the student to the finished drawings of the best artists. Prepared by a professional artist of twenty years experience. Nineteen pages of diagrams and illustrations. A 12-page supplement sent with this book is alone worth its price.

PRICE 50 CENTS A COPY, POSTPAID, or by continuing with order for "How to Illustrate" may be had for 25 cents.

Remit to-day, as this offer may be withdrawn at any time, or sent for free descriptive circular.

BROWN PUBLISHING COMPANY
Room 503, 114 Fifth Ave., New York
Remit by Express, P.O. Money Order or Registered Letter.

1904 YALE

$1500.00

If a better car than the Yale can be bought in America for the same money it was not shown at any of the great Automobile Shows. If there is a car as perfect, at the price, it has not been heard from this season.

We merely echo expert opinion when we say that the Yale is quite alone in its class—a model family car at a moderate figure.

We expect you to see and inspect the Yale but if you'll send for our book it will help you to appreciate this splendid car.

THE KIRK MFG. CO., 915 Oakwood Ave., Toledo, Ohio

Correspondence Instruction

Get the Best!

STUDY with a school that has an established reputation. We already have more graduates than many schools have students. Our text matter has been expressly prepared for correspondence courses by members of the faculty of Northwestern University and the School's own corps of editors.

Our affiliation with Northwestern University will secure entrance credits to the Freshman class without examinations in the academic subjects that you successfully complete with us. Courses in Latin, Literature, How to Write English, Algebra, Geometry, Physics, Botany, Pharmacy, Shorthand, Typewriting, Complete Business Course, including Bookkeeping; and twenty-two Normal School branches. Ask for information on the subject that interests you.

Interstate School of Correspondence
Affiliated with Northwestern University
386-390 Wabash Avenue, Chicago

The Saturday Evening Post
will give

$5,000.00

On May 1st

to the 326 PERSONS who before that time
send the largest number of subscriptions for

The Saturday Evening Post
and
The Ladies' Home Journal

besides paying liberally for every subscription forwarded. The same series of prizes will be repeated in May,
and on June 1st we will give

$10,000.00 More to the 451 PERSONS who have sent the largest number of subscriptions during the entire time.

No expense involved; no previous experience necessary. Just write for details and everything necessary will be sent.

The Curtis Publishing Company
499 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

If You Want to Sell Any Kind of Real Estate in Any Part of the Country, Send for My Plan for Converting Property into Cash. I will gladly send it Free upon Request.

Tell me what kind of a property you have, where it is located and what it is worth; tell me how it compares with other similar properties in your locality; state the distance to the nearest postoffice and the nearest railroad station;
give your reasons for selling and other information that would interest a prospective buyer. I will then tell you how a cash buyer may be found by my method. I will make no charge for writing you fully and outlining the manner in which my plan can be made to fit your individual requirements.

Eight years' experience, offices in principal cities from Boston to San Francisco, hundreds of representatives and the expenditure of over $100,000 a year in advertising give me facilities for selling your property. Fill out the lower Coupon and mail it to me to-day.

If you want to buy any kind of a property anywhere, tell me your requirements. I will guarantee to fill them promptly and save you some money at the same time.
Fill out the upper Coupon and mail it to me to-day.

W. M. OSTRANDER, Suite 384 North American Bldg., Philadelphia

W. M. OSTRANDER,
384 North American Building, Philadelphia.

With a view of buying, I desire information about properties which correspond approximately with the following specifications:

Kind of Property _____
Size _____ State _____
City or County or part of State preferred _____
The price must be between $ _____ and $ _____
I will pay _____ down and the balance _____

Name _____
Address _____

W. M. OSTRANDER,
384 North American Building, Philadelphia.

Please send without cost to me, a plan for finding a cash buyer for my property, which consists of _____

in the town or city of _____ County of _____ and State of _____ and which I desire to sell for $ _____
The plan is to be based upon the following brief description of the property:

Name _____
Address _____

W.M.OSTRANDER
384 North American Bldg., Philadelphia

We are sending Regal Shoes to all parts of the world

Latest Regal Style-Book

SEND a postal at once for the famous Regal Style-Book. Fully illustrated and describes all the new Spring models. Thirty-two pages full of accurate photographs and detailed descriptions of the new Regals—which are exact duplicates of the hand-made advance Spring models being shown this minute by the most exclusive custom boot-makers of New York, London and Paris. The photographs were made direct from the shoes,—no artist's imagination to make allowance for, nothing to take for granted.

This Style-Book gives you a chance to judge the style and custom-made appearance of Regal shoes for yourself. If you were passing one of our 22 New York stores just now, you'd be pretty certain to step in and buy one of our newest custom models. The Regal Style-Book is a Regal store on paper—a Broadway show-window brought to your door.

Never mind whether you are ready for shoes or not.

We'll talk buying and selling whenever you are ready. Get the Style-Book anyhow. A postal brings it. Then we'll place your name on our mailing-list and send you all the future issues of the Style-Book as fast as they come out.

Maybe you think you are hard to fit?

Well, we are now supplying over 300,000 mail-order customers who thought they were, too.

If you have a post-office address there's no reason why you shouldn't be able to keep yourself supplied with the latest custom models of the best shoes made:—exactly the same exclusive styles that we are selling through our 22 New York stores. Your order will be filled by an expert mail-order salesman. Your shoes will be shipped the same day your order comes in. You won't be asked to take any risk. Shoes exchanged or money refunded on request.

Model No. 9324.—This model was designed to fill the need for a strictly dress shoe for gentlemen. It is light, extremely graceful, and is correct for wear with frock suit or evening dress. As illustrated, is button style, selected Patent Calf skin, with soft dual kid tops, light single soles.

Model No. 9801.—Our newest style for Spring. Correct for medium dress and business wear. As illustrated, Imported Enamel, blucher Oxford style—with new style heel.

REGAL SHOE COMPANY—Mail Order Department—129 Summer Street, BOSTON, MASS.

London Mail Order Address, 97 Cheapside, London, England

Women's Regal Shoes are made in all the popular styles, both dainty and mannish. They are sold only through our mail-order department and in our exclusive women's stores.

REGAL

THE SHOE THAT PROVES

22 Regal Stores in New York City
6 Regal Stores in Boston
4 Regal Stores in Philadelphia
72 Regal Stores in the United States and England
15 NEW REGAL STORES being opened this Spring

Hadn't you better send that postal NOW before you forget it?

